All State to Join In Demonstration

The next big thing to happen in the great northwest is the exposition of 1925. The initial kick-off comes with the signing of the joint resolution passed by congress giving the president of the United States authority to invite foreign nations to participate. The very fact that the national congress has recognized Oregon as the state to present the first peace-loving demonstration since the close of the war is sufficient to arouse the interest of the entire northwest to its importance.

Oregon has been first on many occasions and it now has the privilege of being first again in an event of world wide importance. Its people must prove equal to the hour. Therefore, the exposition directorate has called upon the people of the state to assemble on the evening of August 17, 1921, to formally bow their acknowledgements in their respective communities to an event that promises to advance every avenue of our social and industrial life.

Governor Olcott is co-operating with the exposition directorate in presenting the following proclamation that all the people might join as one in honoring the great nation that placed its trust in the spirit that has made America west of the Rockies famous.

"Message to the People of Oregon:

"The signing of the joint resolution by President Harding that was recently passed by congress giving the state of Oregon national recognition to hold a world's exposition in 1925 should be the signal for a state-wide demonstration in recognition of the opportunity afforded to present the resources, scenic advantages and the civilization west of the Rockies to all the world.

"Oregon has occasion to rejoice to its fullest for the opportunity to stage the first great, peace-loving and industrial exposition since the close of the war, wherein the nations of the world will be our guests.

"Therefore, as governor of the state of Oregon, I ask the people to lay their cares aside for the hour and join as one in bowing their acknowledgements to this wonderful opportunity by participating with the great metropolis of the state in their various communities in holding a celebration in keeping with the significance of the occasion.

"Wednesday evening, August 17, 1921, at the hour of 7:30 o'clock is the time set by the exposition directorate for the state to proclaim in unison that the spirit of progress may continue to follow 'Westward' where the course of Empire takes its way."

"(Signed) BEN W. OLCOTT,
"Governor."

Prune Pickin's

By Bert G. Bates

Bert G. Bates, the nervy bird who has the unmitigated gall to fast this autumn of prolonged bunk upon an unsuspecting public, having borrowed enough money off of his friends to get out of town, has gone on a vacation, for which we will all be duly thankful if we ever get our money back, and here is where the office force gets a chance to say anything it wants to about the pencil pusher without the chance of a comeback. This column was started as a joke and it certainly has become one, but just because Bert was fill up a whole column of space and get by without getting licked, he thinks he is a paragrapher—at least that's what he calls it—and has got so darned stuck up he is too good to work with the rest of the ink smudgers around this joint and so goes gallivanting around the country wearing one of these here artist's bow ties and displaying an artistic temperament, which posts are supposed to have but usually don't get. When last seen he was doing a fox trot on his right ear, having slipped on a banana peeling at the corner of the Umpqua Hotel, while trying to catch Cecil Black's car, in which he was supposed to be a passenger for Marshfield, where he is to attend the Elks' convention. As he was helped to his feet he remarked that if he got time he might "produce" some more prune pickins, but as he is not to make himself sick eating crabs it is rather expected that this column will also take a vacation. After a few days Bert we suppose that it will be started up again full blast when he gets back, because his grocery bill will be three weeks ahead and his income four weeks behind and we have occasion to know he hasn't paid for his auto license yet. But at that we hope he has a good time for as Lafe Perkins says, "There's nothin' too good for them that's good for nothing."—The Office Force.)

Your carr., feeling himself two laps ahead of starvation and three behind in grocery bills, has decided to "balance up the books" and take a week off to eat fish with the Elks in Marshfield. Make all checks payable to the above address.

HORRORS OF HOME BREW.

I've been chased by a Pink Rhinoceros,
I've been kicked by a Purple Cow,
I've had a narrow escape from a Polka-dotted Ape,
But I don't know where or how.
And a Lavender Lizard once scared the gizzard
Out of me, and I never will forget.
I've been chased for miles and miles
By Flying Crocodiles—
Those are some of the wild animals
That I have met.

BILL STINGER'S POME.

If a reporter wrote all the stories
That came to his fertile mind;
If the "cub" expressed his opinion,
His real one, of old mankind—
If all the copy desk wisdom
Should get in the daily sheet,
You'd have a little old newspaper
That the "devil" himself couldn't beat.

If the proofreader did the editing
And they published the copy-boys stuff—
If the business end wrote a few stories
(O, they would be snappy enough)
If composing room wiseheads were given
A chance to get out the sheet,
There would be nothing left for perfection
The "rag" would be all complete.

If the newsboys wrote editorials,
And the carriers, too, had their way,
They'd get out a real newspaper,
At least, this is what they say—
But, listen, you embryo editors,
The "boy" who sits in the chair
And takes the brunt of the bosses,
Deserves a cheer, for he's "there."

The country is beginning to realize that a return to normalcy means, not the artificial readjustment of business conditions, through legislation, but rather a readjustment that will come only through the application of the sound principles of industry, thrift and economy.—Samuel R. McKelvie, Governor of Nebraska.

Government has failed to a large extent in regulating and controlling the business undertakings in which it has embarked, why then should its regulation and control over other private matters be enlarged and extended?

Unless we are ready to curb our demands for public expenditures it is useless to complain about the increasing burden of taxation. We must set the example which we expect our public officials to follow.

Entertains "Devil" With Good Results

B. A. T. Lawrence.

Did we entertain the Devil? It seems as how we did, but it developed that he was only the printer's devil after all. Aye! it does develop that we have entertained an angel unawares.

"Giant oaks from little acorns grow." Once a poor printer's devil. Now the leading hotel man of the state. Mr. E. V. Hauser, proprietor of the Multnomah hotel of Portland, the home of welcome for stranger and friend alike, the hotel that is a success not because of its name or its location but because of the man with the personality behind the gun.

Mr. Hauser is perhaps the most enthusiastic, progressive booster in the state. It is men like Hauser who lubricate the wheels of commerce; who start things going when others say it can't be done.

Mr. Hauser rolled into Roseburg Friday evening at the head of an auto caravan consisting of 65 of Portland's leading business men. They were most royally entertained by business men of Roseburg at the Umpqua hotel and may it be said at this point, unless all men are liars, the Umpqua hotel goes to the head of its class and is second to none in the state as dispensers of goodies, and for the manner in which they are served. A man's heart is easily reached through his stomach and in praising our royal host we are about to forget the object of this article.

Getting back to that printer's devil again and the thoughts of "little acorns," "little drops of water," and "little grains of sand," let us follow that little printer's devil for a moment.

That Kid Hauser grew as the acorns do and his bumps of philanthropy and love of music seemed to keep pace with the rest of his anatomy, his policy of live and let live, give and still give, handing out good cheer on every hand, injecting pep and powder wherever he goes, exploded a bomb of joy in the midst of the Douglas County Concert Band that has caused us to scratch our heads and pinch ourselves to be sure we are awake. When Mr. Hauser asked the cause of the band music on Jackson street Friday night and was told the same was in honor of him and his guests, his big heart swelled and a very soft expression came into his eyes. Taking from his pocket a goodly sized roll, he counted out fifty dollars, handed it to Mr. Weaver and said "Give this to the boys with the compliments of a man who has been through the mill and one who loves and appreciates band music."

Is it any wonder that a city like Portland grows by leaps and bounds, that she does things that makes one stop and wonder how it were possible, and here we often impose a world of injustice by giving to a city perhaps because of its name, its locality, etc., when if the facts are uncovered, we find here and there a master mind and the swarms of humanity ready and willing to follow.

The Southern Pacific employes held their annual picnic at Salem Saturday and a number from this city attended. A special train was run out of here early in the morning. Firebugs Cause Drastic Action

On the morning of August 5th an outbreak of incendiary fires on Weaver creek, which is a branch of South Myrtle, threatened to develop into a serious conflagration, but the fires were stifled by the quick action of the forest service rangers and county fire wardens, in spite of the cunning of the fire-bugs and the hot weather of August 5th, 6th and 7th.

"At 9:15 a. m. of the 5th, White Rock lookout spotted three fires showing up simultaneously, and within 15 minutes three more fires appeared." Forest Supervisor Ramsdell states. "By 10:05 a total of eight fires were strung out across the Weaver creek basin over a distance of about three-fourths of a mile and near the national forest boundary. The White Rock ranger station fireman was on the scene in a very short time and a small crew from Myrtle Creek and Roseburg were on the job by afternoon, so that all fires were under control by 10 o'clock the following morning. All eight fires had burned a total of about 40 acres, and on account of burning snags within the fire lines it was necessary to hold men on patrol for several days.

"Immediate steps were taken to apprehend the fire-bugs and a prosecution will be made as soon as all evidence is gathered. As a result of this incendiarism, the Weaver creek basin within the national forest will be closed to all stock grazing for not less than one year, depending upon any trouble with fires in that vicinity. Stock found on this area in the meantime will be subject to the federal trespass regulations. Such action is taken only in those communities where willful attempts to fire the forest resources has caused the government a great deal of expense and trouble and the ban on grazing will be prolonged or extended only in case of further incendiarism.

"In view of the indisputable fact that irrigation on one section of fruit lands on North or South Myrtle is of greater value to those communities than all the range land, and that burning off the timber will result in the loss of water for irrigation throughout the summer months, it seems inconceivable that local public opinion should tolerate deliberate burning of the forest lands. Moreover, it costs money to fight fires and in the long run the taxpayer pays the bill. The clearing and improvement of privately owned lands is a splendid thing, but when lawless attempts are made to fire public timber lands, drastic action must be taken."

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

RESPECT DUE STORY.

Editor of the News-Review:

I am a visitor in your city and I had the pleasure of watching the funeral of an ex-service man this afternoon. One thing I noticed was that a few able bodied men, I mean "bums," did not remove their hats when the flag and the body passed them. I would suggest that the next time a funeral of this kind is held that the Legion detail two men with clubs to remove all hats off the card room playing bums who are not wised up to what the American Flag means yet to a few red blooded Americans.

ADVICE TO LOVELORN AND OTHERS

BY MRS. ELLSBURY

A Daily Column of Questions and Answers Conducted by a Woman Who Knows. Address your Letters to Mrs. Ellsbury Care Roseburg News-Review.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: We are two young men of 20 and 21 and desperately in love with a school teacher much our senior. She treats us as mere infants. What shall we do to change her opinion?

Z. Y. & R. S., Oakland.

Ans. If she is so much your senior, you probably are mere infants to her. And the only way to make her change her opinion is to change your own opinion about being desperately in love with her. She knows that only mere infants would think they were desperately in love with a woman so much older. Why, even if she could love one of you, what on earth could the poor woman do with both of you! I hope that by this time you are both as desperately in love again—this time with two nice girls about 18 or 19 years old.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I am a married lady, but do not live with my husband. I have met one of my old sweethearts, that I used to go with before my marriage. Would I be doing wrong by keeping his company again? My friends all laugh at me for not going out and forgetting my past. WORRY, Roseburg.

Ans. Unless you are divorced, you are a married woman just the same, whether you are living with your husband or not, and you have no right to accept the attentions of other men. Nor would it be fair to the old sweetheart—you would only be hurting him a second time. Forget your past in developing your own mind and character, and in service of some sort but don't try to do so by cultivating the friendship of other men—or you will soon have a second past to forget.

PRUNE MARKET IS ON THE UPGRADE

"The dried fruit market has reached bottom and must soon begin its upward trend," Mr. Sergeant said. "The growers of the west are, of course, dependent upon the eastern markets and those markets are rapidly coming out of the slump in which they have been floundering for several months."

Mr. Sergeant explained that there was no reason to expect the market to be as flourishing as during the high tide seasons of the war period, because of the tighter money market. Crops which were moved in three or four months during those times will now be stretched out over seven or eight months he declared.

Mr. Sergeant declared that the hold-over prune crop would be entirely cleaned up before the new crop reached the market and asserted that there would be no difficulty in moving the new crop, claiming that his firm alone would be able to handle the entire crop of the state or Oregon.

Condemning coperative associations of growers for the failure to create sinking funds from year to year to carry them over lean seasons. Mr. Sergeant pointed out that such associations must establish themselves on better business basis and learn to take the loses which private enterprises expect.
