QUALITY DOMINATES

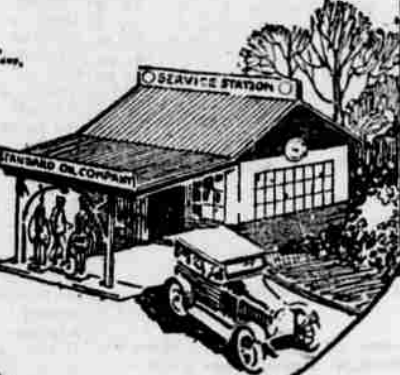

Quality is the genius of production; and the dominant characteristic of Red Crown gasoline is quality.

One cannot experience the results of quality unless quality is in the product.

BAB'S TROUBLES.

"Oh, Alice, I am so unhappy."

"I know, Bab dear, I know."

"Then Duane was right; you know all the time," she confessed, raising her head from my shoulder and looking at me with tear-swollen eyes.

"No, dear. I never suspected you were unhappy until last night. Why, I was so sure of you two that when ever I thought of marrying again, I said: 'There can be happy marriages. Look at Bab and Duane.'"

"Last night after writing my letter I took it down for Duane to mail and I followed the sound of your voices toward the sea-wall. I did not mean to listen, dear, but the things you both said were so surprising that I did not for a time realize what I was doing."

"I will never forgive him. Never! He told me deliberately he was bored with me."

"Yes, but he also said that he was bored with himself."

"Oh, I know he said that, but he did it only after he had seen how he had hurt me."

"I do not think so. You know Duane's business has not gone along at all easily and I don't think that you and I have ever let him forget. Men are only children grown tall, my dear. If they grow tired with work or play their thoughts must be taken away to some other thing that interests them or else they will kick the whole play-house over and march away by themselves in sulky silence to pastures new."

I knew the simile was somewhat mixed, but Bab did not notice it and the idea seemed to strike her as sound.

"But don't you see, Alice," she remonstrated, "that Duane is drinking altogether too much for his own good? His business will never go on straight and right as long as he takes a muddled brain to it every morning. I wish there was no such thing as a drop of liquor in the world."

"Many, many women have said that before you and many, many women will say it after you Bab. They tell us, dear that in a few years we will have prohibition in this country."

"Oh, I don't believe they ever will, but what a wonderful thing it would be, Alice. If Duane hadn't had too much liquor, he would never have spoken to me as he did last night."

"But he would have thought it, my dear girl; he would have thought it."

"But where is he now? Don't you understand, Alice, that while we are talking here he may be lying in some lonely place all mangled and maintained out of recognition under his car."

"Stop, Bab. You mustn't. Get a hold upon yourself."

"I can't, I can't! Duane told me to 'take it standing,' but I can't any more. Alice, I can't any more," and she dropped heavily on the divan at her side and buried her face in her arms.

Neither of us had heard the door bell.

Hannah came in and handed me a telegram. Bab rose up convulsively.

"What is it, Alice, what is it? Is he dead?"

"I have not read it yet."

"Let me," and she almost tore the telegram from my hands.

"You must be quiet, dear."

I took the telegram and turned to the window. It was signed by Allen Henderson.

All that it said was: "Duane in a little trouble. Do not let your sister worry. He notified me this morning and I will take care of him."

Without comment I read it to Bab.

"But it doesn't say anything. It is worse than no news at all."

"No, it isn't dear. We know that Duane is alive."

"I would rather hear that he was dead than know some other things about him."

"Now you are not only cruel but crazy. Of course you know, Bab, that Duane could not do anything so very terrible."

"I don't know anything about it, but I am going to find out."

She picked up the phone, but before she could take the receiver off the hook to call her number the bell rang.

"It is for you, Alice," she said handing me the phone.

"Is this Mrs. Hammersly?"

"Yes."

"This is Allen Henderson speaking."

There was a slight hesitation at the other end of the wire, but with Bab close beside me I could not ask the question that was on my lips.

"Your brother-in-law after drinking a little too much last evening, has gotten into a foolish escapade. I do not think it can be kept out of the papers, as he was recognized. Do you think you could take your sister out of town for a few days or at least keep the newspapers away from her? I expect the matter will be blown over by then."

"I am afraid that will be impossible, Mr. Henderson, because Bab is already preparing to go to the city."

"Let me take the phone. I want to talk to him."

Before Bab could get the phone I hung up.

Tomorrow—Bab's Plans.

Movie Closeups

A beautiful but mud-spattered and generally dishevelled young woman registered at a midsummer resort hotel. Her mud-stained clothes were expensive and modish, her manner was shy and nervous. She signed the name "Pansy O'Donnell" on the hotel register, but everybody from the clerk at the desk to the last guest at the hotel, was absolutely positive that the mysterious stranger was none other than Marie La-Tour, the famous movie actress, trying to steal a little vacation incognito.

That is the situation that starts the fun going, in "Two Weeks With Pay," the Reelart picture with Bebe Daniels starring which will be the feature at the Antlers theater here next week. Jack Muhlall and Walter Hiers play supporting roles.

How could she love big Victor Raoul, a magnificent brute, but nevertheless an untutored son of the great north woods, as silent and as furious as the storm lashed trees in whose shelter he made his home? Yvonne Fontaine, daughter of the fur exporter and the senior partner of Victor, returned from Paris with this in her mind. She had studied at the best continental schools and was a prize to which the gallants of three continents aspired. He realized this when he came into St. Ignace to see her.

With a strange fury he rushed out into the night with murder in his heart. He returned an hour later to find Fontaine near death. Someone had attacked Fontaine and Victor's mighty fists were streaked with blood.

Those questions are to be answered at the Majestic theater to-night when "The Magnificent Brute" is shown with Frank Mayo in the role of Victor Raoul.

The production is a Universal screen offering. It was written by Malcolm Stuart Boylan. Robert Thoraby directed it in the north woods and at Universal City. An excellent cast support Mayo.

Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Newland and son Morris, returned yesterday from an auto trip that took them as far south as Crescent City, Cal., and to the principal cities of southern Oregon. They report a most delightful journey and say the roads over which they traveled were exceptionally good.

Reduction In Rates Announced

L. B. Moore, local Southern Pacific agent, has received a wire from his traffic officials with reference to reduction in import rates announced by the Southern Pacific Friday as follows:

"In addition to the reductions in import rates announced by the Southern Pacific company Friday, C. W. Luce, freight traffic manager for the company, states that railroad lines east of Chicago and north of the Ohio and Potomac rivers have also concurred in the publication of reduced westbound export rates. These reductions will take effect September first. This means, according to Luce, a revival in export tonnage via Pacific coast ports to Asiatic points which has heretofore moved thru the port of New York. The reductions range from six and one-half cents to $2.90 per 100 pounds and will be of material benefit to Pacific coast exporters in bringing back to them the business they have formerly enjoyed but lost to the New York exporters on account of lower charges prevailing from middle west points to the Orient by way of New York and the Panama Canal than via Pacific coast ports. The rates will apply to all eastern ports except those south of the Ohio and Potomac rivers."

OBITUARY NOTICE.

Mrs. D. C. Livingston, wife of Delmar Livingston of Glide, Ore., passed away Saturday, August 13, 1921.

Mrs. Livingston was the youngest daughter of the late John H. Chapman of Glide. She was well known, having taught in the schools of Douglas county for a number of years.

Francis Lucette Chapman was born on the old home farm of J. H. Chapman, Feb. 26, 1874. Being a young woman, life was very dear to her. Today we look on her silver hair and think of her burden of pain, borne so bravely and how she "carried on" until the Master's voice said, "It is enough."

On June 28, 1905 she was married to D. C. Livingston. For many years they made their home near Rainier, Ore. Here their two children, Carleton and Francis, were born. Their two children survive her. Six years ago the family moved to Douglas county and have lived since on a farm, known as the old Livingston home.

Until Saturday, August 6, she was up about her home but this day she gave up and kept her bed and never was able to be with us around the home again. Thursday morning she was restless, and it was apparent to her nurses that the sands of life were running fast. She asked: "Am I going to leave you?" When told yes, she talked to her family telling them many things and goodbyes. She met the last evening without fear. Her mother-heart ached for her children but trusted those she loved to care for them.

Besides her husband and children, she leaves to miss her, two brothers E. B. and S. D. Chapman of Glide, three sisters Mrs. T. S. Riddle of Cody, Wyoming, Mrs. W. L. Singleton of Dixonville, Mrs. S. J. Shum of Glide. Also a large circle of relatives and friends.

Today we feel "that the grave is cruel, the grave is cold." Then we remember "the other side is the city of gold," where we hope to meet you, dearest heart. Mrs. Livingston united with the Presbyterian church many years ago. Her friends found her faithful. She was true to her convictions and loyal to those depending on her. We will miss her everywhere but we know God never makes mistakes. "He had need of her at home."

In the golden dawn of some glad day, we will again clasp hands with our loved one gone before.

MRS. S. J. SHRUM.

Our day is that of short cuts, labor saving devices and greater efficiency in all forms of labor. In steam and electricity man has come into possession of well-nigh unlimited possibilities.

GOOD DISHES WORTH TRYING.

When ideas seem scarce and one does not know what to serve, try some of these:

Corn, California Style.—Mix a can of corn with chopped green pepper and one-half cupful of thick white sauce, well seasoned with salt. Turn into a buttered casserole and cover with strips of bacon. Bake in the oven until the bacon is cooked.

Cabbage With Veal Balls.—Cut the center from a firm head of cabbage and boil the shell in a cloth to keep it from breaking; drain when tender and season well with salt and pepper. To the cabbage taken from the center, chop and add half as much minced veal, one chopped onion, one cupful of cooked rice and one-half cupful of butter, mix and form into balls, the size of a walnut, dip in egg and crumbs and fry in deep fat until brown. Serve the balls in the cabbage shell both steaming hot.

Stuffed Rabbit.—Mix together a cupful of bread crumbs, two tablespoonfuls of chopped parsley, two tablespoonfuls of poultry dressing or any desired herbs, four tablespoonfuls of chopped suet, one teaspoonful of grated lemon rind, one egg and salt and pepper to taste. Add milk if more moisture is needed. Fill the well cleaned rabbit with this mixture and sew up carefully. Simmer for an hour or longer, according to the age of the rabbit. Serve with parsley and butter and serve buttered onions as a vegetable.

Preserved Berries.—Currants, crushed, or any fruit which can be well washed and mixed with an equal quantity of sugar, allowed to stand overnight in a cool place, or long enough to have the sugar thoroughly dissolved and mixed through the fruit, may be canned in cold sterile jars and sealed, keeping perfectly if kept in a cold cellar or in the bottom of the ice chest until cold weather comes on. Keep the jars from the light.

Take a pint of whipped cream, add a cupful and a half of cream cheese, a cupful of walnut meats, and the same of dates. Serve in sherbet cups garnished with a cherry.
