Movie Closeups

A production declared to run almost the entire gamut of movie possibilities is "The Sky Pilot," directed by King Vidor for exhibition at the Antlers theater tonight.

This picture is one of the latest releases by the Associated First National pictures, and is distributed as a Catharine Curtis production.

Ralph Connor's original novel, "The Sky Pilot," from which the picture was adapted, most artistically blended the subtlety of human interest with the tenacity of dramatic situations, but even his own are has been enhanced in the picturization of the story. One of the most effective of the thrilling incidents in this story is a cattle stampede in which hundreds of panic-stricken animals are seen in a mad rush toward the camera.

To John Bowers is allotted the role of "The Sky Pilot," while others in the cast are such local favorites as David Butler, Colleen Moore, Harry Todd and Kathleen Kirkman. According to Broadway critics, the picture is one of the real motion picture gems of the year.

"A Kiss in Time," the latest Wanda Hawley release, which comes to the Majestic theater tonight, is adapted from a story by Royal Brown, which appeared in McClure's Magazine, under the title "From Four Till 11:03."

It is the story of a story about a woman that a man met and kissed a girl within four hours. A man writes the story, and the magazine which buys it sends it to a girl illustrator, who promptly sends it back, saying that she absolutely refuses to illustrate such an impossible yarn.

Greatly piqued when he hears this the author makes a wager with himself that he will kiss the artist within four hours after he meets her, and he sets about the task. Of course he wins both the wager and the girl.

As played by Wanda Hawley and T. Roy Barnes, with Walter Hiers on hand, in the role of an amateur detective, to complicate the fun, this comedy promises a real treat. The picture was directed by Thomas Heffron.

"Girls Don't Gamble," at the Liberty theater tonight, is an altogether satisfying and humorous photoplay, unique in its treatment and novel in its theme. "Girls Don't Gamble" was adapted for the screen from the story by George Weston under the title of "Girls Don't Gamble any More," which ran in the Saturday Evening Post.

David Butler is particularly good as Jimmie Fisher, the hero truck driver, and Misses Field, Haines and Knowlton are very good as the daughters of Wilbur Rathbone.

There is plenty of action throughout the picture and a love theme which is both humorous and serious. The photography is good. Sets and locations are well chosen and the direction by Fred J. Butler is worthy of special comment. The picture is suitable for any audience and will amuse and interest everyone.

A Woman Who Wouldn't Remarry

By Leah McGee Gibson
The Novel Editor

ALICIA'S THOUGHT OF SUCCESS

As Bab closed the door I wandered into little Hal's deserted nursery. A feeling of helplessness came over me. I looked about at the familiar appointments and realized then that ever since I had awakened after that awful cataclysm in my life wherein I had lost a husband and acquired a son I had gone into his little, unconscious presence for solace, for inspiration, for the solving of all my problems—and today he was not there.

For the first time since I had been writing I knew that Hal, more than anyone or anything else, had contributed to my success.

Subconsciously I was working for him. My ultimate ambition, I suddenly recognized, was that I might be able to give him the education and position in life that his father would have given him had he lived.

"My goal is in sight," I thought triumphantly as I sat down beside the bed in the little low chair Hal never allowed anyone to sit in but me. Then I took from my bag a number of letters that I had hastily thrust into, when I found them on the hall table at the shore before I started in town with Bab.

The first was from a big publisher saying that he would like to have the privilege of publishing my new book which he had seen advertised as coming out serially in Mr. Early's magazine during the next year.

There was another one from a widely-read weekly magazine, asking if I was open for a proposition for my exclusive services.

Although nothing had been said about it, I knew that Mr. Early expected to have everything that I wrote in the future, even though I had given up my editorial position in his office. However, I could not afford to reject a proposition of this kind, so without any comment I sent the letter to Mr. Early in care of the office. I knew Miss Belcher would open it before she sent it on to him and, although it was not a very meritorious impulse, I was human enough to want her to know that I was not dependent upon any of the Early publications.

As I sat there alone in the nursery I began to think of my rather meteoric rise since I had come to New York, and I wondered if I would have gained recognition quite as quickly if Mr. Early had not taken a personal interest in me. Will the time ever come when the first impression that a woman makes will not be one of sex?

I remembered what a friend of mine, the woman editor of a great magazine, had told me of her experience when she was applying for a position.

"My dear Alicia," she said, "there will always be the question of sex in all the affairs of life. We can prate as much as we like that there is no sex in brain, but if we are not hypocrites we must acknowledge we are straining the truth. Your ability and mine can be as great as that of any man who works with us, but it will be a different kind of ability. We may arrive at the same conclusions, but the means by which we arrive are always different."

"The so-called new woman makes a mistake by not trying to keep within her meteor and yet I always have a feeling of disgust and indignation when I run up against the man who first and last and all the time thinks of me as a woman and not simply as another human being."

"I have never forgiven the editor of this magazine for the way in which he received me when I applied for my first job on it. You know that my given name is a family cognomen and from my card a stranger can hardly tell whether I am a woman or a man, as I never have 'Miss' on my business cards."

"I sent this card to the editor late one afternoon. The office boy was a new one. He let me come inside the hall until I happened to be standing very near the door of the editor's private office. The boy gave the great man my card before closing the door. I heard him ask in rather a puzzled tone: 'Is it a man or woman?'"

"'A woman.'"
"Is she good looking?"
"Yes."
"Send her in."

"I have often wondered," continued my friend, "what would have been my fate if I had not pleased the masculine taste of the office boy that day."

As this incident came to me I found myself smiling somewhat sadly, for I knew that much of my popularity with my present reading public was due to the fact that my appearance and personality pleased Roland Early at first, even more than my stories had impressed him. A woman might as well accept it. Her sex is her introduction. Afterward it is up to her to make good along the line of her ambition.

Weather Conditions

For Past Week Given

The following report on weather conditions in Oregon for the period ending Aug. 16, 1921, is issued by Frank Gilliam, meteorologist of the department of agriculture:

The temperature was moderate to high, except in coast counties. Light rains in northeastern counties relieved drought conditions somewhat but were insufficient for growing crops, elsewhere little or no precipitation occurred.

Barley, oats and spring wheat harvest drawing to a close except in the eastern districts. Rye all cut and nearly threshed. Winter wheat harvest about complete in Umatilla and Sherman counties and is in full swing in Baker and Grant counties; this crop is mostly cut and threshing well advanced in the central valleys; the hot winds ripened the wheat very rapidly in Lane county and there will be some loss from shatter grain. Corn is making good growth under irrigation, but where not irrigated is badly in need of rain.

Late apples are sizing well, but need cooler weather in the Rogue River valley and high temperature with absence of wind has caused some sun scald in the Hood River district. Bartlett pear picking continues in Jackson and will soon begin in Douglas county. Prunes are doing fairly well under the droughty conditions. Peaches are coming into market in increasing quantities. Blackberries are ripening rapidly; some are being picked, but they are drying up in places and would be greatly benefited by rain.

Haying continues in coast and eastern counties under ideal conditions. Seed clover in short and needs rain; cutting of the second crop of alfalfa is in shock or stack, the third crop shows good growth in Umatilla and is about ready to cut in Jackson, and report is received that grasshoppers are doing considerable damage to the fourth crop in Josephine county. While valley pastures are mostly dry except where irrigated, the mountain ranges are still ample, and livestock continues in uniformly good condition.

Late planting of potatoes are suffering for moisture in nonirrigated localities; the drought has caused premature ripening of the early varieties in some places and this crop is mostly on the market. Gardens where not irrigated are dried up. Tomatoes, cantaloupes and roasting ears are becoming plentiful. While hops are fair to good, they are much in need of rain.

Pike Peak Record

Sought By Climbers

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo., Aug. 17.—(U.P.)—The annual rush up Pike's Peak is on. Sturdy tourists from the East who have mountain climbing ambition are practicing daily to break the "hiking" record up the peak of 14,000 feet and 11 minutes made by Howard Robinson of this city, ten years ago.

So far, no one has equaled Robinson's record, according to the wise ones. Robinson was an employee of the Cog road and was stationed at the Summit house on the very top of the peak. His morning exercise consisted of a hike down the peak to Colorado Springs, returning on the train.

An easterner, Herbert Edwards, trained for a month to break Robinson's record. Edwards climbed the peak each day—sometimes twice a day. But he failed to equal Robinson's time.

This year there is another crop of climbing tourists practicing daily on the peak. What's lacking in ability is more than made up in ambition, as the perspiring, short-winded easterners toil wearily up the long climb.

Six Cents Price

For Prune Pickers

SALEM, Aug. 18.—The wages for prune pickers in the Sheridan, Yamhill and Carlton district were fixed yesterday at a meeting of the growers in Carlton. George Zimmerman presided and members of the Oregon Growers association were in the majority.

A price of 6 cents per box for picking prunes was decided on, with a bonus of 2 cents a box for pickers who stay throughout the season. In orchards where the fruit is scattering the day basis wage will be 30
