Entered as second-class matter May 17, 1920, at the post office at Roseburg, Oregon, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

ROSEBURG, OREGON, AUGUST 31, 1921.

WE HAVE REACHED THE BORDER LINE.

Once upon a time two perfectly friendly neighbors had a fall out, because the one had passed the remark that the other's new hat did not become her. That's all there was to it, but it started a feud, broke up the social circle and destroyed confidence generally, says a magazine writer.

The same thing happens to two other neighbors and bosom friends, known as Business and Prosperity. Business was inclined to be a straight laced personage and she thought she espied in her good neighbor a tendency toward loose morals and was pretty free with her criticism about gambling, spending, splurging and a general tendency to avoid the duties due from every home builder.

Imagine what this started. The friends of Business rallied around her and the supporters of Prosperity rushed to her aid.

They are not speaking, of course, both imagine they are right and each waiting on the other to make amends honorable, because they know this thing cannot go on—they cannot afford it. Their husbands, while not actually partners, have overlapping interests that make the situation particularly embarrassing.

This whole business situation is the outcome of idle gossip based on a certain amount of righteousness, no doubt, but mightily distorted and the good neighbors are sick of it. Why, one of them was heard to say: "We never had any trouble in this neighborhood until that newly rich with all her false standards settled here and set a pace that turned our heads and spread on down the line to our servants, and was taken up by the milk man—passed along to the ice man, the coal man and the grocery boy."

It isn't necessary to ask where your sympathy lies, you want the same conditions that gave you comfort and happiness in 1914 before Boom Town conditions struck your neighbors and set you wild, and caused you to lose your poise. Prosperity, wear your "Sunday best" on week days all dressed up with no intentions of soiling them in any kind of labor. Silk shirts on the back of a coal heaver is not conducive to labor, nor does it lend any assurance to a winter's coal supply.

Don't fancy that this picture applies only to the fellow who toils with his hands. It can be passed clear up and down the line with equal fitness. Work is the thing we have overlooked, we lost it in the shuffle and don't know where to find it. We turned up our nose at it, thought it wasn't in our set. One day work put us down as no good and quit us, and now we're under the painful necessity of dropping all of our newly-acquired possessions and useless habits and go out and coax him back into our daily lives.

No one likes sham either, in neighbors or communities. We've all been shamming, some of us have been most successful in passing it and cashing it in, but we are at the end of the road. We have reached the border line where our passports of past performance will, or will not, carry us over.

All the bouquets received at this office are for the guy that edits the "Prune Pickin's" column. Generous quantities of fruit, however, are received daily by the editorial staff, and as a hard winter approaches, it reminds us that when we reach up to the cupboard for a can of nice, juicy fruit for our daily menu, the fellow who has been bombarding our readers under the guise of a "Prune Picker" will arise to remark, "Why did they say it with flowers?"

There are still a few careless hunters left who persist in shooting at moving objects in the thick brush. Some fellows who are so cock-sure of getting a deer, but ordinarily couldn't shoot a hole in a barn door at ten feet distance, always "get their man" when they take a crack at something moving in the brush. This kind of business must be mighty interesting to the careless hunter until he approaches his victim to carry out the "bleeding process." Then he comes face to face with his act of criminal carelessness.

Roseburg should not overlook the opportunity of helping in every way possible the completion of the highway to Crater Lake via Tiller. This tourist business is no small asset and live communities are aware to the advantages to be derived in many ways from the fellow who is "just giving the country the once over." He is a mighty valuable visitor, from many standpoints.

Big doings at the court house square tomorrow evening. No, it has nothing to do with the sensational case being investigated by the district attorney. It is another one of those fine band concerts given by the Douglas County Band, and which are becoming famous as a mid-week musical event.

It will cost the county no small sum of money to dispose of the Douglas county murder case. But if the disposition is equitable, the taxpayers will probably feel they got their money's worth. There is one thing certain, however, they don't want any repeaters in the way of gruesome murder mysteries.

If there is anyone hiding in the "bushes" who has not yet reported an incident in connection with the Brumfield murder mystery we hope he shows up in time to get a witness fee as a souvenir of the notorious case.

You can talk to almost twenty thousand people every day through the columns of the News-Review. It's certainly a great advertising medium.

The public is anxiously awaiting a "surprise" from an entirely different angle in the Brumfield case. Who can supply it?

News sleuths are beginning to hover around the courthouse in generous quantities for the "opening day."

WONDERFUL GAIN IN WEIGHT
IS NOW REPORTED BY THIS YOUNG TENNESSEE WOMAN

Writing from Maxey, Ga., A. J. Gillen, proprietor of a large department store at that place, says:

"I have a customer here who was in bed for three years and did not go to a meal at any time. She had five physicians and they all gave her out. One bottle of Tanlac got her up, on a second bottle she commenced keeping house, and on the third she did all the cooking and housework for a family of eight."

This sounds incredible, but it comes unsolicited from a highly creditable source and is copied verbatim from the letter.

Tanlac is sold in Roseburg by W. F. Chapman's Pharmacy and by leading druggists everywhere.

GOOD PROGRAM AT FAIR.

A fine program was held in connection with the community fair at Fair Oaks yesterday afternoon. It opened with a community sing, followed by a solo by Miss Helen Lewis. Included in the program were addresses by O. C. Brown, A. E. Street, H. C. Seymour, Mr. Weber and Peter Adams. A clever monologue-imitation of Uncle Josh was given by F. C. Spencer, who is advertising the Kerr-Clifford poultry and dairy feeds. Mr. Spencer will be present at several more community fairs during the next two weeks.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

Notice is hereby given that any person found dumping cans or rubbish of any kind on any of the highways of this county will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. Many of the roads throughout the county are becoming the dump ground for all kinds of refuse and this nuisance must be abated at once.

GEO. K. QUINE, County Judge.
 Dated, Roseburg, Or., Aug. 29, 1921.

Prune Pickin's

By Bert G. Bates

Some people spend their days wishing for a million dollars, but we'd be satisfied to have an option on the seats in the courtroom during the Brumfield trial.

THINGS TO WORRY ABOUT.
 Adam and Eve were never married.

Some men waste a lot of time trying to save it.

HERE'S A REMEDY.
 This would be
 A happy world
 If people would Always wear the
 Smiles they wear
 When they have
 Their pictures taken.

Be normal and act normally and you won't get any publicity.

This would be a great world if all the people who couldn't sing wouldn't.

Some men do nothing but "second the motion."

In Roseburg, when they're young they hang around the Palace of Sweets and then when they grow up they cross the street to Harry Pearce's harness shop.

A lot of men never had an appetite for liquor until it went up to 50 cents a drink.

HAW! HAW!
 They were talking about a third party.

"That fellow's the biggest thief in the world," said the Tall Man.
 "That's right," agreed the Short Man. "Why he'd steal the holes out of a flute."

I always love my enemies because they give me a lot more free advertising than my friends do.

In speaking of the murder case we might say that "innocence" and "immunity" both start with an "i" but there ends the resemblance.

LUCKY.
 The little bird sings all the day.
 But why should he be praised?
 He hasn't any rent to pay,
 And knows it won't be raised.

—Luke McLuke.

The dog has surely got a snap.
 He surely has, says I.
 For he can always take his nap—
 And has not food to buy.

—Hastings (Neb.) Tribune.

The luckiest bird in all the world.
 Who has no need of kale,
 Is the goop who eats at our expense
 And takes his rest in jail.

The reason a seven-year-old girl isn't proud of her figure is because she isn't old enough to know that she has one.

Every man likes to believe that when he dies he will have the longest funeral ever pulled off in his town.

A WONDER.
 Let's take a drink
 To Oswald Falk.
 He doesn't think
 He knows it all.

STATE PRESS COMMENT

A NEW CRATER LAKE.

Everybody has praised the Crater Lake management this year. So putting in a word, one merely joins a general and familiar chorus. But one phase of the improvement is worthy of more extended comment. This relates to the personal element.

In former years everyone was impressed by the natural beauties, but after the first gasp there was an awkward pause. It was like entering a beautiful residence, expecting to greet an old friend, but finding no one at home. There was no one at home at Crater Lake, inside the lodge or out. After a few "Ohs" and "Ahs" and a leaving of cards as it were, one was eager to get away.

This year, quite the reverse. There is a decidedly homelike atmosphere at the lake. One feels it immediately on entering the lodge. You are not greeted as if you were merely an animated five-dollar bill, welcomed solely as a contributor to household expenses, but as a human being on a pilgrimage of devotion. Will Steel, the father of Crater Lake, puts this over. He is behind the counter to greet you, not as another customer, but as another candidate for initiation into the Mystic Order of Crater Lake enthusiasts.

But the rather surprising thing is how this mere change in method transforms one's impression of Crater Lake itself. Probably psychologists could explain the matter scientifically. But to the average t. b. n. it merely means that natural beauties increase in direct proportion to personal comfort. It is all very well to rave about the primitive, to extol the advantages of hardback and condensed milk, but the people who stay at hotels, want hotel luxuries and that is what they get at Crater Lake now, and never before.

Moreover, the entire hotel staff is on its toes. They are all new and they have the enthusiasm of fresh recruits. Not only is the table excellent, but the service combines beauty and efficiency to a remarkable degree.

At night the guests gather around the fire like a large and happy family. There is music furnished by members of the hotel staff, and there is dancing, entered into even by those who climbed Garfield peak in the afternoon.

Then Will Steel usually gives a little talk on Crater Lake, its history and formation, which is just what the visitors are eager to hear, and about 10 o'clock everyone trots off to bed.

It may be merely the difference between good hotel management and no hotel management at all, but there seems to be something more—the creation of atmosphere. There has always been plenty of atmosphere outside the lodge, but now there is atmosphere in it. This appears to be the supreme achievement of the Crater Lake management of 1921.—Medford Mail-Tribune.

WHAT OF THE LURID CRIME WAVE?

The Astoria Budget paints this lurid picture: "Two Chinamen murdered in Astoria and their murderers undetermined! A prominent Roseburg professional man under arrest for one of the most cold-blooded murders in the state's annals! The body of a Milton rancher found in an abandoned well. A whole family nearly wiped out by a Petaluma desperado! A Tacoma woman taken into custody for alleged killing of a Tennessee man! A double killing in California in one of life's eternal triangles! A Pendleton cowboy shot to death after a trivial quarrel!"

These are only a few of the items in the current crime record, but they are enough to show the trend toward degeneracy. The cause and the remedy alike are matters that cause a wide divergence of opinion. The most significant thing of all, in our opinion, the futility of prohibitory laws, social welfare work and theoretical ideas enacted into law. The home and its influence is not what it used to be because parents turn their children over to Y. M. C. A.'s and Boy Scout leaders, and juvenile courts, and there are too many side activities in the public schools taking the boys and girls away from parental care and protection; and more and more parents are consenting to these things because it relieves them of the responsibility. We like the brief conclusion of the Budget's editorial, because it says much in a few words:

"The remedy we do not know, but a little more consistent teaching by church and school, press and platform of the 'Thou shalt nots' of the ten commandments might prove as good as any."

One of our exchanges puts the Irish question, as it concerns the United States, in the clearest possible terms when it says: "Had the issue involved only demand for Irish autonomy, argued before the court of American opinion, the question might have been dealt with promptly and without bias. But beginning honestly in such a demand it ended dishonestly in organizations planned to influence political contests in the United States. Unscrupulous leaders have used the patriotic ardor of the Irish in building up machines to control elections and distribute privilege in a country in which the fight for Irish independence is utterly irrelevant as a campaign issue. As a result a vast number of Americans have less sympathy for the Irish cause in Ireland than it deserves, and England is made to feel that there is a body of American political opinion always inimical to British welfare. With the actual quarrel ended, as it may be at the London conference, the pseudo-patriotism which has been the stock in trade of too many Irish leaders in the United States would lose its potency. It is difficult to regard Ireland's claims dispassionately, while they constitute a menace to the essential peace between Great Britain and the United States."—Eugene Guard.
