PREPARING FOR A CAREER

Giving myself no more time to worry over my situation, I turned on the water for a bath. I arranged my toilet articles on top of the dresser, unpacked my clothes, meantime wishing that I had brought none of them as I knew now that they were neither stylish nor suitable.

Upon emerging from my bath I appreciated for the first time in my life that old saying that: "Cleanliness is next to Godliness." I also understand how comfort of body reacted upon one's spirits. I was ready to meet the world. I took my courage in my hand, after my mirror had told me that I was looking very well, and took the elevator down to the lobby.

I had not dared ask the man behind the counter what I was paying for my room. I had learned from Mrs. Watkins in Chicago that at the big American hotels one paid for one's meals and room separately.

"I must be as economical as possible," I thought, remembering the clothes I had just unpacked and realizing that I would probably have to buy an entirely new wardrobe. "Where is the dining room?" I asked the elevator man.

"Just around to the left," he answered.

I stood in the doorway a moment as the head waiter came forward and asked: "Are you alone, Miss?" "Yes."

He seated me at a little table by the side of the wall up on a little kind of a balcony. Very near me was Lord Beacham and his party. It was all I could do to keep from bowing because they were the only faces that I had recognized since I had arrived in Los Angeles.

The prices on the menu frightened me, but I decided I could afford a few days at this hotel until I could look around for something more worthy my means.

I thought I was very hungry when I came down, but the sight of the prices and the knowledge that my luncheon had cost me two dollars—although it was very simple—took my appetite away.

Leaving the table, I bought all the daily papers and again went back to my room, where—to my consternation—I read on the movie page that one of the studios in which there was to be a swimming scene. I could not swim. At another studio a ballroom scene was featured—I could not dance—and at still another the young men and women were playing golf—grandfather thought golf a man's game and I did not know how to play.

I was a little comforted, however, to notice that Miss Anne Storn had been chosen for a certain part because she was such a good horsewoman; and that Miss Jean Elliott was the type of the American outdoor girl, and consequently she had been given a good part at another studio. I could ride and I was the type of outdoor girl.

I decided not to visit any of the studios until the next morning. Knowing that the first thing that I would need would be photographs, I walked out on the streets of Los Angeles.

After walking about for a short time, rather aimlessly, I came upon a rather imposing photograph shop and wandered in.

"What can I do for you?" inquired a very pretty girl.

"I would like some pictures." "Won't you sit here please?" She showed me a number of different styles of photographs.

"These are forty dollars a dozen, these fifty, and these sixty." "Haven't you any cheaper than these? I shall probably want a good many."

"Do you wish them for professional purposes? We have a professional rate."

"I wasn't quite sure if I was getting them under false pretenses when I said: "Yes, I want the professional rate."

"Then you will want three or four poses at least. You had better make an appointment and come tomorrow. We furnish this size picture, unmounted, on this paper, to professionals for forty dollars a hundred with six poses."

Even that seemed a great deal to me, but I supposed it was all right and I made the appointment for the next morning.

"You had better bring two or three changes of costumes," said the young woman. "A street suit, an evening gown, riding clothes, and sport clothes and anything else you think would look well in pictures. The suit you have on will do very nicely for the street costume."

"How long will it be before I can have them?" "Oh, about a week."

"But I must have them before that." "Well there is a possibility of getting them in four days, but I cannot promise them under a week."

Coming out from the photograph gallery, I passed a number of beautiful shops and seeing some sport suits in one of the windows, I entered—and was lost. For the rest of the afternoon I revealed in clothes. It was only when I came to pay my bill that I came out of my dream of happiness.

There is a psychology about clothes that is most comforting. I have always had a great sympathy for the girl who said: "There is comfort in being well-dressed that religion cannot give." And so I assuaged my conscience—which told me that I was being very extravagant—by saying that I was only investing in my stock of trade.

Breathing Under Water.

If a swimmer is three minutes under water he is looked upon as a prodigy, but M. Theoris, a French doctor, declares that a man could remain half an hour if he only knew how to handle the carbonic acid in his system.

A man proved recently to a body of medical experts and scientists that it was possible to remain under water and laugh at the audience, eat cherries, take out the stones, pull a wry face when the cherry proves sour, and smile when a pretty woman touched the glass with a cigarette.

The secret of all this lies in using a special method of natural breathing as soon as you are under water, to exhale the carbonic acid gas. This requires some practice. When this is done you stop the nostrils, thereby keeping off all inhalation. Relief of the carbonic acid in the blood, a man is able to remain much longer under water.

End-of-the-World Prophecy.

The morning of December 17, 1919, the planets Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn and Neptune came into alignment in the heavens; that is, all the planets, with the exception of the earth, lay in an approximate line with the sun and all of them, except Uranus, were on the same side of the sun. They were strung along in the same plane and approximately the same line, like so many points on one spoke of a wheel. Meanwhile Uranus was on the same line but on the other side of the sun, like the point of the spoke directly opposite. The arrangement had been foretold by astronomers and certain prognosticators predicted the end of the world. However, the sun rose as usual on that day and the weather was normal.
