The Thrilling and Dramatic Story of Virginia Fairfax's Ambition!

HERBERT RICHARDSON CALLS

"Silly, I don't mean make-up," said Gloria as I told her I did not want to use rouge. "I mean you should have a touch of color on your gown. All that white with your blond hair looks very sweet, but no one would single you out in a crowd. Wait a minute! Let me think."

She rushed into her room again and came back with a belt of lovely pale-blue satin ribbon. "Luckily it matches this veil," she said holding out a long length of blue chiffon.

Deftly she wound the veil about my waist till it almost touched the floor below my skirt. Then, snipping it off to length of ribbon, she tied the end of each streamer in a tiny bow around the top of the tassel which finished the point at each side of my skirt. The other ends of the ribbons she sewed to the bracelet of georgette which formed a part of my sleeve at my waste. This bracelet held together the strips of georgette which hung from the armhole leaving my arms bare at every motion.

The effect was charming but still Gloria was not satisfied.

"You need just one more thing," she remarked as she rushed away.

I heard her rummaging around in the drawers of her wardrobe trunk. She came back with a beautiful bunch of hand-made pink and blue flowers which she pinned in the knot of my sash.

"Now you are perfect! And we are just in time for there goes the telephone." I heard my charming and competent little roommate say: "Yes" ——, "Tell Mr. Richardson that we will be right down."

A little smile curled her lips as she said this. "I knew he expected to come up but we are going to fool him several times this evening."

I did not realize how lively Ria's addition to my gown was until, raising my arms to put on my pale blue evening cape, I found that the movement pulled the points of my skirt up until it resembled the petals of a flower.

Ria adjusted her green cape with its lovely soft moleskin collar. "How beautiful that it. It must have cost a million dollars," I exclaimed in raptures.

"It cost me less than twenty."

"How did you do it?"

"Well, this chiffon velvet is a queer shade, you see, and I bought this remnant for eight dollars. The chiffon lining cost me about eight dollars more and Mona Hansen gave me the collar. I know that every woman who sees me tonight will say: 'I would like to have her tell me how she manages it.' She has been in 'atmosphere' until this last part, and then will add all sorts of nasty and catty things. Not one of them know how many times I have searched the cheaper stores for something that made their clothes look like thirty cents when I wore it, although they have purchased their clothes at one of the fine French shops."

"I should think that you would design dresses," I said again admiring her costume as we went down in the elevator.

"I may sometime. I am getting rather tired of this business."

"Hello, Billy," said Ria.

A long, lean, saturnine looking chap came forward. "Virgie, let me introduce to you, Billy Johnson, the comedian of our little flock, the greatest little laugh-producer in the business. Billy, this is Virginia Winston."

He took my hand and bowed over it.

"Aren't you going to introduce me, Ria?"

"Pardon me. Virginia this is my friend—" there was a slight accent on the friend—"Mr. Herbert Richardson, whose life is spent in making the picture colony happy. It will give him the greatest pleasure in the world to see you smile," she continued.

"Yes, Virginia, smile for the gentleman," exclaimed Mr. Johnson.

"I am going to smile for you, Mr. Johnson," I said taking his arm as I saw Herbert Richardson edging over to me.

The manner in which Billy Johnson drew away from me slightly told me that it was agreed upon between the two men that Billy should attach himself to Gloria. Gloria however never batted an eyelash, but I knew she was laughing in her sleeve, and I felt rather proud of myself for so adroitly arranging matters.

"Did you tell her to do this, Ria?" I heard Herb Richardson say to Gloria as we moved forward toward the car.

"Do what? Come to your party Yes, I told her to do that."

In spite of the combined maneuvering of the two men. I managed to pull Mr. Johnson into the back seat with me and with ill grace Richardson helped Ria to the seat beside his.

"Say, you are some little fixer," Billy Johnson whispered.

"I don't understand you Mr. Johnson."

"Oh, call me Billy. Everybody does. They Billy if they like me and Bill when they don't."

"Does anyone hate you—can anyone hate you?"

"That is a sweet thing for you to say. I'm falling for you, kid, I am falling."

I opened my eyes wide at this for I think it was the first time I had heard that slang phrase. My spirits arose, my nerves were beginning to tingle with excitement, I felt my cheeks grow warm even though the wind came against them with a rush. Because Herb Richardson was breaking all speed laws.

As we drew up to the motor entrance, I heard Herb Richardson say: "Can it, Gloria, can it."

COTTON MEN FEAR COMPETITION FROM GERMANY.

BOSTON, Nov. 1.—(United Press.)—Production costs will be the subject of open discussion in the first session of the annual meeting of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers which will open here tomorrow in connection with the International Textile Exposition.

A general relief over the prospect of tariff protection was noticed among the cotton men here to attend. It was pointed out that during the war, the big struggle eliminated European countries as competitors in the cotton trade, but now the manufacturers of the country welcome protection as a result of indications of renewed competition from abroad.

It was stated today that the cotton manufacturers of New England do not contemplate any immediate wage reductions, although it was admitted that the question of wages and labor costs were being studied.

Cotton trade developments in central Europe are being closely watched, it was learned, because of the possibility of Germany becoming a dangerous competitor in the textile industry.

Indications are that the export trade is proceeding on the basis of an annual export of 675,000,000 yards of cotton goods.

Speaking of possible German competition, it was pointed out that German mill workers are paid the equivalent of $4 a week, while American operatives receive nearly six times that wage.

Tomorrow's meeting will be given over almost entirely to the discussion of production costs in which the various representatives compared figures.

On Thursday morning, Frank W. Reynolds, chairman of the committee on industrial research of the national association, will preside at a meeting in which research and the progress made in connection with cotton manufacture will be described.

Thirty Million Is Lane Co. Valuation

EUGENE, Nov. 1.—Lane county property's total assessed valuation this year over and above public utilities is $30,815,950, which is slightly less than last year's valuation when there is deducted from it $148,960 in exemptions for veterans and wives of veterans of the Civil, Mexican and Indian wars, making the sum upon which the county will levy taxes $30,666,990.

Fifty millions of dollars is taken as the actual property value of the county when it is considered that the assessed valuation is about 60 per cent. Public utilities assessed last year at about $4,000,000 are handled by the state tax commissioner, who does not send his report to the county until a later date.

Valuations of several items have jumped at comparison with last year's report. Logging roads and rolling stock are this year assessed at $99,140, where last year they were valued at but $58,440. Valuation on tractors has jumped from $44,850 to $130,940.

Buick Wins First Choice

Again the Buick has won the privilege of first choice at both of the big National Automobile Shows. At the New York and Chicago shows the Buick will have the place of honor, due to the fact that during the past year the Buick Motor Company did the greatest volume of business. The award is made on the number of sales actually made during the year preceding the date of the shows.

Inasmuch as there are 94 different cars entered in the New York show and 82 in the Chicago show, first choice in the selection of show space means that the Buick has won another worthy victory in the automobile world.

Inasmuch as the Buick heads the list of all other makes of cars, stamps the latest model Buick as one of the most popular sellers ever manufactured.

This honor has been awarded to the Buick on more than one occasion, but during the past year with competition so keen after the return to normal conditions in practically every line of business, the fact that the Buick again has won this distinction, speaks well for the product of the Buick Motor Company, and the popularity of the valve-in-head car.

The New York Show is to be held at the Grand Central Palace during the week of January 7 to 13. The Chicago show will be held two weeks later at the Coliseum.
