The Thrilling and Dramatic Story of Virginia Fairfax's Ambition!

VIRGINIA GETS A SURPRISE

"I don't quite understand, Mrs. Drayton, why you are so sure that I will have no trouble getting on in pictures," I replied tartly.

There was a rasp in my voice as I said this.

"Oh, I didn't mean anything nasty," she replied. "But any one can see that Tommy Warner is very much taken with you."

"I don't think he is. He is just kind-hearted. One would have more reason to say that he was taken with you. He turned me down when the director suggested that I might do the little part and singled you out from the rest of the atmosphere for it. Perhaps I haven't been here long enough to get the viewpoint that one must have a director personally interested to make progress."

Ruth Drayton looked at me rather shamefully, but she said nothing. Then and there—to my surprise—I got an inkling of the ruthless ambition and brittle moral fibre of Ruth Drayton's character. I rather pitied the young chap who was ill back in his apartment, for it seemed to me that, perhaps more or less unconsciously, this girl being in love with love only, had used Ralph Drayton to further her scheme of breaking into the movies. Many girls, I found out afterwards, are like this. You find them in every walk of life where young women start toward the goal of their ambition. Perhaps they are more plentiful in the movies because such women usually try to pick the easiest way and unfortunately those people who exploit moving pictures and movie actors only talk of the successes and tell nothing of the disappointment and failures.

Thirty-five hundred girls come to Los Angeles every year to enter this alluring profession. And taking the most sanguine press agent's word for it there are seldom more than ten girls out of that thirty-five hundred who ever reach stardom.

This logical philosophy did not come to me on the day when Ruth Drayton made the stirring remark regarding Tommy Warner and myself. I got no further than thinking that she was a little cat as I hurriedly put on my coat and hat and met Tommy at the gate.

"Gee, Virgie, this will be some newspaper story," I said. "There ain't going to be no newspaper story because no one but you and I are going to know anything about it except the interested parties."

"It will take a nice, fat piece of Herb Richardson's roll to keep it then."

"You are not going to tell, and surely I am not."

"But don't you understand, dear girl, that there must be such things as licenses and some one to tie them up?"

"Surely I do, but I read only yesterday of one of the popular movie actresses who had been married twice in two years and kept secret not only both marriages but at least one divorce."

Tommy laughed. "Well, blondes do put one over once in a while, don't they?"

We got to the apartment and found Ria very quiet and sedate. She seemed to have thrown all her nervousness aside when she came to her decision of marriage and caring for Kitty Dalton.

"Herb says, Tommy, that you are to take us in your car."

"All right. Where are we going, Gloria?"

"To Riverside. One of Herb's college friends is a minister down there."

"You don't mean John Storm?" demanded Tommy.

"Yes, that is what Herb called him."

"Then you are all right. John is a regular fellow. He shows a moving picture in his church every Sunday night and preached a sermon last Sunday against censorship."

"Does that make him a regular fellow?" asked Ria with a smile.

"Well, at least it shows that he has none of that intolerance which I consider the unpardonable sin," said Tommy earnestly. "Not but what I think he would stand up for what he considers the moral good of the community; not but what he is trying to save all of humanity, which comes within reach of his voice, but he has never struck me as being a man who for the mere sake of raising his own goodness on a pedestal would mount it on the backs of some poor devils who have fallen in a mucky heap at his feet."

"Why, Tommy, I never dreamed that you had such thoughts upon such serious things."

"Perhaps, Ria, you have gotten it into your mind that an assistant director has no time to think. I confess most of my time seems to be given to following through a megaphone."

While we were talking Ria had brought two fur coats and a couple of robes for the nights in California are always cold.

For the first time I realized that she was gowned in a soft old-blue georgette with a hat of wistaria shades.

"You are going to be a very lovely bride, my dear," I whispered as she held the lovely seal coat for me to slip into and picked up the squirrel for herself.

FOUGHT AT NIGHT WITH HUGE BIRD

SARANAC LAKE, N. Y., Nov. 29. (United Press.)—As the result of one of the most unusual battles on record in the Adirondacks, William Reyell of Redford may lose the sight of an eye.

Entering his barn at night without a light, he was struck by a huge bird. He seized it by the leg and attempted to drag it down. The bird fought furiously beating him with its powerful wings and pecking at his head and face. A blow in the eye blinded him and he fell to the floor. He was taken to a Plattsburg hospital.

Investigation showed the bird to be a great blue heron, the largest and strongest bird in the Adirondacks, which had evidently taken up winter quarters in the barn.

LONDON, Nov. 29. (United Press.)—Rev. G. B. Borrill of Islington has just paid his taxes, a commonplace enough thing to do, but for Rev. Borrill this involved the end of a self-imposed imprisonment in his own house for ten months to keep from having a process served.

NEW YORKERS TO FLY TO THE MOUNTAINS

SARANAC LAKE, N. Y., Nov. 29. (United Press.)—It is reported that a group of wealthy New York men who own camps in the Adirondacks are planning an aerial passenger service between the metropolis and northern Adirondacks to be put in operation next summer.

Plans call for the construction of six hydro-airplanes that will carry seven passengers. The estimated cost of the planes is $15,000. One way fare will be forty dollars and landings will be made at Saranac Lake, Paul Smiths, Saranac, and Lake Placid. Time between New York and the resorts will be five hours, against twelve by railroad motor. The service will be open to the general public.

It is said arrangements have been completed and that the contract for the hydro-airplanes will soon be

Decision on New Law Is Pending

SALEM, Nov. 29.—The constitutionality of the 1921 budget law which has been creating consternation in all counties of the state, remained undecided after Judge George Bingham, of the circuit court, stated that he would take the mandamus proceedings filed by J. E. Kinsey or road district 60, against Oscar Steerham, county assessor, under advisement.

John Carson district attorney cited the opinion of the state attorney general in which it was stated that the law in question applied to road districts.

The impossibility of the road districts complying with the law was forcefully presented by Roy Shields, attorney for the plaintiff. The reasons for such as noted in Mr. Shields' memorandum presented to the court are as follows:

"The levying board in each district consists of all the resident taxpayers. This board is required to appoint an equal number of qualified electors and free holders who, with the tax levying board constitute the budget committee. It will be noted that the persons appointed must be qualified electors. Necessarily the levying board, who are all the qualified electors in the district, could not find any other qualified electors who they could so appoint on the budget committee. They could not appoint themselves for (1) the statute clearly contemplates that the appointive members of the committee shall be a separate body who with the members of the levying board shall constitute the budget committee; and (2) the act expressly specifies that no elector so appointed shall be an officer, agent or employee of any municipal corporation. Patrolmen are appointed by the electors, and it is common knowledge that most of the road work is done by electors in the district, and therefore none of these would be competent appointees on this committee although they are electors."

Mr. Shields also pointed out that because of the way the road tax is expended it is impossible to keep the amounts spent for service, material and supplies, and that there was no method of ascertaining or setting forth the unit cost for the preceding years, and that the law requires the budget to be filed in the office of the levying board, and a road district has no office.
