The Thrilling and Dramatic Story of Virginia Fairfax's Ambition!

ANOTHER JOB

The place in Los Angeles to see the down-and-outers and the up-and-comers in the motion picture business is at the Service Bureau.

I had been too engrossed in my affairs on my former visit to notice much. As I went up the steps I thought I was in a panic for fear my pictures were gone. I could not afford to lose forty-eight dollars. My hand closed vindictively over my little good luck elephant and I said softly: "I'll smash you on the pavement if I don't find them."

My gaze traveled over a group of old men in shabby clothes leaning against the fence. Some of them were unshaven; others had made a pathetic attempt at neatness and cleanliness. They are the kind of men one sees in pictures depicting the tramps, the gangsters and the down-and-outers—the kind that you find in the background, in doorways, and in mob scenes of the slums.

These types are wanted only occasionally so that these men are able to make only a very precarious living. But they seem perfectly satisfied just talking among themselves. They never realize that the world—the great, busy, splendid world—is dead to them. They are the hoboes of the picture business.

Two nattily dressed young chaps ran up the steps just ahead of me. They were dressed in extreme fashion with the exception that they wore no hats—for it is quite the fashion in Los Angeles and Hollywood for the young men to economize on hats.

As they passed me one said "No, I am not going to buy a new hat until I have to use it. I need the money to take Jeanette to the Cocoanut Grove this week. She has a new dress that she says is a pippin and she must show it there."

My imagination spanned the years. I wondered whether some days one would find these young men leaning against the fence outside of the Service Bureau or riding down in their specially built automobiles to the lot where they were starring.

This brought me back to myself with a jerk, for I felt that of I had lost the pictures it would set me back a long way on my ambitious train to the starlit heights.

I walked through the hallway, entered the second doorway at the left and went directly toward the cashier's window, in front of which stood Mr. Ballantyne slowly turning over my pictures. I could not see his face but he was so interested that he did not hear me until I stood beside him.

"You should be more careful of these, Miss Winston."

At first it gave me another little thrill to think he had remembered my name and connected it with my face. I did not realize immediately that my name was on the outside of the box.

"These pictures are very good. It would pay you to leave one or two of them at each of the studios. I would like two of them for this office."

"Take those you like best, Mr. Ballantyne. I was just starting out with them to the studios."

"Why not go to the Kalsey Studio, Miss Winston? I think they are to need quite a number of good looking young people day after tomorrow. I would like to send you out, but we do not handle the casting of their atmosphere. If their set is filled, call us."

With this he turned and went up the stairs to his office.

I caught a red car as soon as possible.

Arriving at the Kalsey studio, I was asked by a man in a khaki uniform with a large star on the lapel of his coat, whom I wanted to see. I stated my business and he said: "Wait just a minute."

Just a minute meant a half hour and then I was confronted by a good-natured gentleman with very blond hair, who, after looking at me carefully and scrutinizing my pictures, said: "Won't you come in, Miss Winston?"

I passed through the gate trembling. My knees began to feel wobbly again, but I was proud to know that my voice was firm as I answered the innumerable questions asked me as to experience, wardrobe, weight, height and others. I was getting along famously until he asked: "Do you dance?"

"A little."

"Do you ride?"

"Yes,' and I could not help adding, "Every southern girl can ride."

He raised his head a little and looked at me again.

"Swim?"

"No. I've lived inland."

"Then you haven't been here long?"

"No. Mr. Ballyntine suggested that I come and see you."

"I am glad you came, Miss Winston. We can use you. You will be on the set, made up, at 9 o'clock, day after tomorrow, in evening dress. Something light and girlish for you with gold and silver shoes and stockings."

"Thank you. I will be here."

The sun was shining again. I left the studio, walking along Vine street and the great eucalyptus trees seemed rustling their congratulations. I went up to one of them and leaned against its shimmering whiteness. To it I confessed my happiness.

Looking up, I saw faces in a passing motor smiling derisively and I made a rush for Hollywood Boulevard and the car.

TOMORROW—A Visit from Herb.

EUGENE TO HAVE TWO TOURIST CAMP PARKS

Eugene is to have two auto parks for tourists within an hour's walk from each other, next summer.

Melvin Hansen, local realtor, today announced that he had acquired a tract of 17 acres of land two blocks south of the new street car station in West Springfield, on the main Pacific highway, and says that he will operate a commercial tourist park.

This new park in which the tourist will have to pay to spend the evening will have dining service, bungalow tents and a supervised children's playground in addition to many other attractions.

It will be called the Eugene Auto Tourist camp.

It is also planned to make this the first unit in selling campaigns of Lane county scenery, and towards that end a moving picture outfit, showing important industrial resources as well as the scenic wonders may be added.

Negotiations are now in progress, he says, to interest capital in a resort on the upper McKenzie some place near where the Skyline trail crosses the highway.

OREGON TO SAVE 3 MILLIONS

PORTLAND, Dec. 9.—Three million dollars which Oregon has been punkling up annually for Uncle Sam, will stay in the state's war-frayed and tax-flattened pocket-book—beginning the first of the year.

Revision of war tax legislation—eliminating the tax on railroad fares and freight charges—will turn the trick.

In Oregon the saving will be about $250,000 a month, which the government has collected the past three years from travelers and receivers of freight.

ETHERIDGE AGAIN IN PRIVATE BUSINESS LIFE

John L. Etheridge, the Portland broker and head of the Morris Brothers bond house which failed a couple of years ago, is again in charge of the reorganized concern. Criminal suits against Etheridge are still pending. Much of the stock held in the new company is that of creditors who have pooled their interests. The first thing Etheridge did after opening for business was to flood the newspapers with large advertisements and he will likely set the pace again in boosting business in that way.

MEDFORD OIL WELL HAS INDICATIONS

MEDFORD, Dec. 12.—Development at Trigonia well this week has progressed nicely, although gas eruptions have made additional work. On Wednesday there was an eruption of gas twice during the day. Again on Friday, the pressure from gas raised the casing eight inches. Oil sands are present and tests give splendid results. With the remarkable showing of gas and oil the management are making every effort to expediate the work and complete a test at the present depth. Drilling is being rushed as fast as possible, and on this account work was carried on Sunday.
