"Let 'er Sting" Slogan of Bee Men

PENDLETON, Jan. 12.—(United Press.)—Few persons become imbued with more than a mild form of enthusiasm when bees are mentioned. The word connects haste, surprise, and terrific speed. The bees' sting mean more than their honey.

But honey production is becoming one of the big industries of the northwest, according to Oregon beekeepers who will meet here in their annual convention January 26 and 27.

"Let 'er sting," a paraphrased echo of the Pendleton Roundup, has become the slogan of the keepers of apiaries, who this year are speaking of their jubilee as a "round-up." There may even be bucking contests, racing and bulldogging—depending on how many bees attend the roundup, and how many get loose.

Problems of disease control, inspection, cooperative honey marketing and other issues of interest to this growing northwest industry will be discussed during the two day session.

H. A. Cullen of Corvallis, secretary of the organization, has estimated nearly 200 bee keepers will attend the confab. The sweetest part of the festivities will be honey sampling and enticing displays of cloying sweetmeat.

The Thrilling and Dramatic Story of Virginia Fairfax's Ambition!

A FRIEND IN NEED

I awakened next morning with a heavy cold and felt miserable, but I needed money and felt I could not quit my job. I managed to get through the next four days at the Kalsey studio. The last day, however, breathing pained me so I could not speak. That night I fell unconscious in my room. When I recovered who should I find bending over me but Kitty Dalton!"

"Good Lord, kid, but you're sick," she said. "Ria told me that you didn't know enough to take care of yourself, and I guess she is right. How did you get this way?"

Kitty's eyes were covered with dark glasses, but otherwise she seemed well and strong for she lifted me by main strength onto the bed.

"You've got to have a doctor," asserted Kitty, positively. "I could hear you breathing before I got to your door."

"Oh, Kitty! I can't—I can't have a doctor."

"Oh, I know a grand one and he'll bring you out all right. I met him at the hospital."

"But, Kitty, I haven't any money to pay a doctor," I managed to whisper hoarsely.

"Money doesn't mean anything in my young life. Don't you know I've got $5,000 that Ria and Herb gave me just before they sailed? Say, that was an easy way to make money, wasn't it?"

"I do not think so, Kitty," I shuddered. "And if it were easy, you must not spend it on me."

"What's it for if it isn't to spend? Oh, Virgie, let me spend it on you. If I don't I will blow it on something that won't be half as good for me."

"But I—I."

"Oh, Virgie! You do want me to stay with you, don't you? You don't feel yourself above me, do you? If you do, I'll get out and let you die gracefully in an atmosphere of virtue and contentment. Lord knows I don't want to force myself on any perfect lady."

"It isn't that, Kitty. You don't understand how grateful I am to you. It just doesn't seem right for you to spend your money on me, that's all. It may be a long time before you get a job, you know."

"Well, have you got any money? I won't spend mine if you have."

"Very little."

"Then I'll spend my own. Now dont talk any more, for you are getting hoarser every minute."

I don't know when Kitty undressed me. She told me afterwards that I was delirious. "You just seemed to hold onto life when you had hold of my hand," she said.

I had a feeling that there were others in the room from time to time and once I heard a man's voice saying: "Oh, She'll pull through, but she must have a nurse."

And I heard Kitty reply:

"I'll nurse her—I'll nurse her, doctor. That'll be about all I am good for, for the next two or three weeks. It would be as much as my life is worth to look into a Klieg light for that length of time."

I wasn't sure whether I had dreamed this or not, but when I woke up—nearly a week afterward—I found Ketty beside my bed, and I knew that it was true and that blessed girl had been taking care of me all that time.

We didn't talk much about it but I was almost despairing for fear that I would never be able to show Kitty how grateful I was.

Sometimes I have wondered if we regard all the commandments alike.

Poor Kitty had probably shattered most of them many times, but she kept a few very carefully, I am sure. I never heard her say an unkind thing about anyone. In fact, she had all the virtues but one, and was kind to everyone but herself. When I put her beside some of the narrow-minded people in the town from which I came, women who would murder another's reputation and think nothing of it; who were envious and unkind; narrow and bigoted, and yet who prided themselves upon their virtue and would have drawn their skirts away from poor Kitty, I decided that it wasn't for any of us to find fault with anyone else and the breaking of one commandment was just as sinful as another in the sight of God.

Kitty is now lying in the cemetery of Los Angeles. Her story shall not be told here. Her secrets are sacred with me. Whatever her faults no one could have been a more devoted friend than she was in my hour of trouble. I shall love and reverence her memory all my life.

I found out that both Tommy Warner and John Storm had both been to see me and offered all help that was necessary, but Kitty told them to go away like good little boys and play with their toys—that she was going to see me through this herself, and she did.

Kitty never mentioned Theodore Stratton and I was afraid to ask, until one day when I had been up and dressed all morning and was protesting that I was well enough to go to work as soon as I could get a job, Kitty said:

"Well, then you are well enough to see your correspondence," and she poured a sheaf of letters into my lap.

There was one from Ria, two from Aunt Virginia, three from Eddie Montforth and one that I did not recognize, but—with a beating heart—opened it first.

Tomorrow—Kitty Dalton.

ADVICE TO LOVELORN AND OTHERS

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I am very young, and have been married nearly a year, but am not a good cook, and my husband complains frequently about the food. I try to be, and do exactly as the cook books say, but the food never seemed to look or taste as it should. What could I do to improve, and what do you think is the matter? I am afraid my husband will not stand for it much longer.
YOUNG WIFE.

Ans. Why not get some old and experienced cook that you know real well to help you. That is the only real way to learn to cook if you are not naturally adept at it. Have her teach you just the very simplest things first. Go to her house, or have her come to yours, and cook these things under her direction. Don't try complicated things, but just the very simplest, and as you learn to cook them so they are palatable, the harder things will not seem so hard at all. Do not get discouraged but keep on trying. It takes time to be a good cook. Ask your husband to be patient with you, and tell him that you are trying hard.

* * *

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I received a very nice Christmas present from a man. It was a surprise, as I did not expect to get anything at all from him. He knew that I did not expect to give him anything, so I did not attempt to after he gave me the gift. Would it be all right now to give him a picture of myself that I have and that he has admired several times? I would like to reciprocate in some way.
M. V.

Ans. If he is a very good friend, it would be all right to give him the picture. Pictures are usually considered too personal to give to people that one does not know well. Use your own judgment about the matter.

Movie Closeups

A new Robertson-Cole superspecial production, "Black Roses," starring the inimitable dramatic screen artist Sessue Hayakawa, opened an engagement of two days yesterday at the Liberty theater. This is undoubtedly the best picture that Hayakawa has made and adds to his laurels as a versatile artist. In the cast with Hayakawa is Tsuru Aoki, his petite and pretty wife, who gives a performance quite as wonderful as that of her husband.

"Black Roses" was written and scenarioized by E. Richard Schayer and directed by Colin Campbell. The scenes of the drama are all laid in America with some of the dramatic moments pictured within the precincts of New York's Chinatown. The perfection of settings, both interior and exterior, adds materially to the value of the story.

Charming Betty Compson gave an admirable portrayal of the role of Lady Babbie in her new Paramount picture, "The Little Minister," at the Antlers theater yesterday. The photoplay production is praiseworthy in every particular and enthused all who saw the presentation. Delightfully insouciant, Miss Compson won favor by her witchery and sparkle. George Hackathorne is fine as Gavin, "The Little Minister." There is much thrill in the attack on Thrums and in the weavers' battle with the constabulary. Capt. Helliwell, the villain of the piece, is finely played by Nigel Barrie, while Edwin Stevens is a convincing Lord Rintoul. There isn't a dull scene in the picture, which plays for the last time tonight.

In "Opened Shutters," her latest Universal production, which is showing at the Majestic theatre tonight only, Edith Roberts appears as a New England lassie, a type new to her screen experience.

In recent successes she has specialized on the Spanish characterizations as in "Lasca" and "The Fire Cat" but, she says, the role of the average American girl gives her greater dramatic scope, and this assertion is completely confirmed by those who have seen her admirable work in "Opened Shutters."

Miss Roberts is daintily petite with dark brown hair, blue eyes and an olive complexion which lends itself easily to either the Latin roles or the more fair Anglo-Saxon interpretations.
