MAKE MONEY IN PRODUCING BEEF

Herd of Good Cows and Purebred Sire of Prime Importance in Making Start.

SELECT BEST HEIFER CALVES

No Method Adapted to All Farms and Conditions as Much Depends on Pasture Available and Nearness of Market.

Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture. We are a nation of meat eaters. The average American eats more than 140 pounds of this concentrated food each year. The importance of meat, particularly beef, is nowhere more emphatically brought out than at the great central stockyards, some of which cover nearly a square mile of ground. To keep the supply of animals moving through these yards, necessary to feed the millions of people, requires the raising of cattle, hogs, and sheep on hundreds of thousands of farms and ranches.

Improve Each Generation. In profitable beef production a herd of good cows and a good purebred bull are of great importance. Each generation of cattle raised should be better than the preceding one. This can be accomplished by selecting the best heifer calves each year to take the place of barren, shy-breeding, and old cows, and buying a better bull each two or three years. All other calves produced may be sold either as weanlings at six or eight months old, as stockers or feeders at one or two years, finished as baby beef at sixteen to twenty months, or as fat steers at an older age. The system employed depends largely upon the pasture and feed available, transportation costs, and the market price of milk and cattle.

The systems of handling beef-breeding herds which are most extensively practiced are "beef," "baby beef," and "dual-purpose." In the first two systems calves run with their dams until weaned, the cows not being milked. They differ in that cows intended for producing calves for baby beef generally receive better care because their calves are to be fattened shortly after weaning, which makes it necessary to give them a good start on milk.

The straight beef system is primarily adapted to the range country of the West and South, which is too rough, dry, or sandy for cultivation. Where the climate permits, pasture is depended on the year round. Some cottonseed cake may be used during unusually bad weather or periods of feed shortage. Where snow covers the range a part of the year, hay is put up for winter feeding. Little grain is fed, except where grain sorghums can be grown. From southern ranges the cattle are usually sold as stockers at every age from weaning time to maturity. Recently many fat calves have been going to the slaughterhouses. From the North and West a large part of the cattle go to market grass-fat as three-year-olds.

Baby-beef production is a highly specialized business and is adapted to regions where there is a plentiful supply of fattening feeds together with good pasture for the summer maintenance of the breeding herd and nursing calves. The corn belt is the best place for this system, but it is practiced to some extent in other places.

When to Finish Baby Beef. If spring calves are to be finished as baby beefs, they should be taught to eat grain before they are weaned. They should go into the dry lot at the end of the pasture season and be ready for market by June or July. If possible, they should have good pasture for a couple of weeks after weaning. Full-born calves should be kept on grain when they are turned on pasture in the spring. The quantity of grain should be gradually increased throughout the summer and fall so that they will be finished for market in December or January. When the pasture fails, hay and silage should be supplied. Stocker calves require some meal or grain during their first winter to keep them thrifty and growing. They can utilize to advantage much more roughage, such as stalk fields, meadows, silage, and straw than baby beefs. As yearlings and two-year-olds they may be wintered on roughage alone, some clover or alfalfa hay being given if available.

Individuality Marks Winter Sport Togs

Take, for instance, this fascinating gray checked tweed, in the sketch, which can be utilized for any form of outdoor sport. The sweater vest fits snugly and is made in various colored tints. Over this is worn a perfectly straight line jacket, with tight sleeves. A wide cape with deep shawl collar, lined with a brilliant shade of deep orange, and a light gray angora tam complete the costume.

Although the white knitted sports frock, worn in the picture by Julia Faye, who is taking a leading part in Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount picture, "Saturday Night," is most seasonable for the mid-winter Southern trip, it makes a welcome addition, in a chillier climate, if worn under the cape. As it stands, with its short sleeves, its white fox fur and white felt hat trimmed with a white aigrette, it is essentially a costume for a warmer climate. This is but one of the many examples proving that individuality is the thing that counts this season. If a costume is becoming, that is sufficient. It will be noted that sports coats and frocks follow no particular example as they have in years gone by. It was thought, not so long ago, that anything would do for outdoor wear, but now even the most casual survey of the new intriguing designs is bound to develop keener interest, and will give as much cause for competition as the daily promenade along Fifth Avenue.

This competition naturally warrants any sort of idea, and has given rise to the most absurd angles for trimming. The crushable hat in the upper right hand circle seems tame enough when considered for itself, but after four brilliantly colored feathers have been added in this manner, it readily assumes a position of unique importance.
