IMPROVEMENT CLUB MEETS

The Garden Valley Improvement club held the first meeting of the year at the home of Mrs. P. Sinclair, in a very good attendance.

During the meeting it was decided to undertake a centennial of the state constitution preparatory to a more complete course in citizenship training in cooperation with the Oregon Federation of Women's Clubs. This intended to promote Americanization which not only will help our foreign-born to become better Americans, but also helps to keep ourselves in touch with the changes and additions in our national, state and local governments.

After the business meeting Mrs. Young read interesting selections from the Great Seal and the history of Oregon prior to 1852.

Mrs. Young (senior) who crossed the plains in 1852 held the attention of all as she told of her experiences during the trip, the conditions of the country at that time and later developments.

A very pleasant social hour was enjoyed and delicious refreshments were served by the hostess.

Mrs. J. D. Young will entertain the club at her home January 26th.

Frank Terry, of the Equitable Savings and Loan Association, is now in town at the Umpqua hotel.

SURPRISING NEWS

"By the way," added Kitty. "I can give you one surprise about the party. Who do you think I met there? I will give you one guess and you must name the most unlikely person that you can think of to be in a place of that kind."

"John Storm," I hazarded, "and I don't think it unlikely at all for him to go."

"The girl guessed right the very first time," hummed Kitty. "and I'll tell you something still more surprising. He sat out four dances with yours truly. I promised to go out and help him with his Easter festival. Say, Virgie, he is the first man I have met since I have been out here that didn't give me a feeling that I was his rightful prey."

I looked Kitty over carefully. Since she had not been drinking and had cut out the "snow" as she called it, she had grown very pretty. Her face had filled out and had lost its unhealthy pallor. When she spoke of John Storm, her expression lost most of its hardness and her smile was sweetly feminine instead of brilliantly hard.

"Stranger things than this have happened," I said to myself not knowing what the future held for poor Kitty.

"I think," she interrupted my thoughts, "that my apparent capture of the minister brought my stock up a little for Tony Melville told me to come on out and sign a contract for a part today. I'm going right away. You won't mind, dear, if I leave you."

"Oh, I'm so glad. Of course I won't mind. Tell Mr. Melville you are living with me and we would love to have him come and see us. He was very nice to me that evening even if he was a big director and I just a little nobody. He talked to me a long while. Told me to come around and see him sometime."

"And haven't you been?"

"No, I was working all the time until I became sick. But I am well enough to go out and I think tomorrow I will go around to see Mr. Stratton."

I thought Kitty looked at me rather queerly but she offered no remark except to say that she was in a hurry to get away.

All day long I waited for a telephone message or a special delivery letter but none came.

I did receive a telephonic message from Jack Thompson. "You must forgive me, Virgie, for not calling you up for the last week. I telephoned Kitty often while you were ill, but I have been on location down at Coronado. Say, I had a peach of a time. They put us up at the best hotel and I had luck to meet the nicest girl I have ever known."

"Really?"

"Oh, of course, I am excepting you. But she is not in the business. She is one of those rare girls who combine brains with money and personality."

"She said she would write me. I didn't tell her I was just 'atmosphere' and as usual she asked me the name of the play I was working in. I told her it wasn't named yet—that we were just using a working title. Say, Virgie, don't you think that you could get me into a small part with Stratton? It would do a lot of good with that girl if she could just see me and my name on the screen. That's a good pal. I knew you'd try. When are you going to work?"

"I haven't the slightest idea, Jack. I haven't been out of my room since I was taken ill. I only heard that Mr. Stratton was in town this morning."

"Oh, he has been in town a week and the studios are full of gossip over who he is going to cast in his next picture. I didn't say your name but I assumed that it was being kept for the grand surprise."

After Jack rang off, I sat down to think. I couldn't make it seem possible that Theodore Stratton had been in town a week and I hadn't heard from him. I wondered if I could wait until the next day to go to see him. I looked at the clock. It was half past six. Kitty would soon be coming in.

That is why she looked at me so queerly. She must have known how long Mr. Stratton had been in town. What could have happened to have changed his mind—or had he changed his mind? Well, I would know in the morning.

Kitty came rushing in all excitement. "Virgie, you have brought me luck! You have brought me luck! What do you think Tony Melville said to me?"

"I have been having you in mind for a long time but you were deliberately throwing away your chances and the night you were taken to the hospital I decided that it was all over with you, but I guess you have come back. I am ready to give you another chance!"

Tomorrow—Virgie Seeks a Job.

Happy Afternoon at Clark Home

Mrs. Ray W. Clark entertained at her home yesterday with an afternoon party. The affair was in honor of Roy, Jr.'s second birthday and he received many lovely gifts. Several children along with their mothers attended and a very happy time was enjoyed. Games were played the first part of the afternoon after which a delectable luncheon was served at a prettily decorated table. Those present were Mrs. Irvin Brunson and children, Mrs. Fleischacker, Mrs. C. A. Lockwood, Mrs. Fowler, Mrs. R. H. Moore and mother, Mrs. Frank Lillburn and daughter, Mrs. W. H. Bowen and son, Mrs. E. E. Culver and children, Mrs. E. Burch, and the hostess, Mrs. Ray W. Clark.

Movie Closeups

"Some day," said Katherine MacDonald, the screen beauty, who will be seen at the Antlers theatre, for the last time tonight, in "Stranger Than Fiction," her latest release. "I am going to found a school for girls who want to be motion picture actresses."

Whether Miss MacDonald is serious about this is a matter of doubt. But the fact remains that her daily mail brings so many requests from girls for detailed information on how to break into motion pictures that it would appear that such a school would be a very wise educational institution. Most of the letters are from girls of high school age.

A study in contrasts is provided by two of the biggest scenes in "Devotion," A. J. Bimberg's initial Associated Producers' release which features Hazel Dawn. The first scene depicts a society ball at the home of Ruth Wayne on Riverside drive, New York. Here, beneath soft shaded lights and amid artistic surroundings the dancers sway softly to the strains of the Strauss waltz and the buzz of conventional "small talk" fills the air. The following scene also shows a dance, in the same city of New York and within a few minutes travel from Riverside drive. But this time it is the Annual Grand Ball of the Gas House Gang. No soft lights here. Beneath the harsh glare of unshaded lamps a packed perspiring mass of humanity shuffle their feet to the discordant blare of a jazz band. A careless step, a blow and pandemonium reigns. "Devotion" will be the principal attraction at the Liberty theatre tonight.

Many husbands, if they received confessions from their wives of voluntary return of other men's affections, would consider homicide, suicide or immediate separation as the only course to be taken. A man superior to such a nature is portrayed in "False Kisses," the Universal special attraction starring Miss du Pont at the Majestic theatre tonight only. Stricken blind through an accident, the husband, played by Pat O'Malley, is unaware for a period that his wife is accepting the attentions of another man in his very presence.

Advice to Lovelorn and Others

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I am coming to you for some advice. I am 18 years of age and old enough to go with girls and to dances. I have a girl friend, and I think a lot of her. She is 17, and goes to dances quite often, but she goes with her folks often, and she goes with them. Now should I go with her when her mother and father are alone, or should I go alone? I take her to shows about three times a week. She never wants to go to the show after she leaves the house but wants to go for a walk down toward the river and doesn't act nice. Should I quit going with her or should I go with her? Also when I take her to the ice cream parlor she always orders a lot of stuff. Sometimes it costs me $1.50. Is that the proper way for a girl to do? I often thought I ought to quit going with her. Should I? But still when I get away from her for three or four days I get lonesome for her. Hoping you will answer this soon.

Oregon Prunes Are Appreciated

That Oregon prunes are greatly appreciated in practically all sections of the country, is shown by a letter received by Wm. Bell from Dr. H. B. Tanner, a friend located at Eastland, Texas. Mr. Bell sent Dr. Tanner a box of choice Oregon prunes at Christmas time and has received the following letter in reply:

Eastland, Texas, January 13, 1922.

Mr. William Bell, Roseburg, Oregon.

Dear Sir:

This is rather late to acknowledge a Christmas present but Mrs. Tanner and I wish to convey our thanks to you for the box of prunes which you sent and which was received by us in due time. We have enjoyed eating them as nothing so good along these lines is ever put on this market.

I have been very busy with matters in connection with the new year and hence have to offer this as an excuse for not before acknowledging receipt of the box. Please convey to Mrs. Bell and yourself our hearty thanks and well wishes for your prosperity for the new year.

Yours very truly,
DR. H. B. TANNER.
