VIRGINIA SEEKS A JOB

"Tony Melville looked awfully pleased when I told him I was living with you. He said: (Now don't get too much set-up, Virgie) 'That little girl will be heard from some day. You are in luck to be with her'."

"Kitty that's real encouragement," I enthused, adding, "and in order not to delay that unnecessarily I am going out to look for a job tomorrow."

"No, I am going to see Theodore Stratton first," I advised. Intuition told me that this was best.

"It is a mighty good part in the script but Heaven alone knows what it will be when Tony gets through with it. A new author wrote the story and he won't dare say his soul is his own."

"But I thought authors are seldom on the sets. He will not know that any changes have been made until he sees it, will he, Kitty?"

"Virgie, I think from what I know of pictures, that directors do not pay for stories or even ideas that they can use. They get the producers to buy ideas that will give them ideas."

and builds up his own continuity. "But I can find no fault with my part in this play. It is the best I have ever had. And listen, dear, it is an ingenue part."

"You wait, Virgie, until you hear what the girls who are younger than I will say, when they find out that I am going to play the part."

"I couldn't sleep. I tossed all night. The hours seemed interminable. I got up right after Kitty left in the morning, taking my bath and dressing myself carefully. I had to resort to a little rouse, as my illness had left me very pale."

"When I had opened the box I could not resist the little sport suit and lovely hat with its one long pheasant feather which curled around under my ear in a stunning new fashion."

"But when I reached the office of the casting director and looked into his frozen face I was not so sure."

"The blood of all the Fairfax's boiled in me. 'Mr. Stratton asked me to call. Will you please tell him that Miss Winston is here?'"

"In a short time he came back and said: 'Mr. Stratton is too busy to see you today.'"

ADVICE TO LOVELORN AND OTHERS

Dear Mrs. Elsbury: When I was walking home the other day, a good looking man stopped and spoke to me. He was mistaken in who I was, and thought it was someone he had met at a dance.

Ans. I cannot tell you whether he was pretending to have met you before or not, but I think it possible that your brother is right.

WORRIED GIRL. Ans. I cannot tell you whether he was pretending to have met you before or not, but I think it possible that your brother is right.

Among the many thrilling scenes that make "Playing the Game," the new Paramount photoplay featuring Charles Ray, the Thomas H. Ince star, a notable picture is a fight in which Billy Elmer, a fight in real life, as well as in pictures, takes a prominent part.

Mr. Ray's leading woman in this picture is Doris Lee, a young woman of charm and magnetism. "Playing the Game" will be shown at the Majestic theatre Saturday and Sunday.

Movie Closeups

Lois Weber has shown directorial finesse in assembling the cast for "What's Worth While?" her latest Paramount picture, which comes to the Artlers theatre Sunday and Monday nights.

Claire Windsor, "newest discovery" and remains lead in previous Weber triumphs, is leading woman, Louis Calhern, who makes his film debut in "What's Worth While?" is a popular hero of many stage perform-
