Mechanics Offered Extension Course

The state board of vocational education is offering to Roseburg mechanics a trade extension course in the study of auto mechanics and gas engine repairing. This extension work is arranged on the group system, each group to consist of from eight to twelve men as may be arranged by the instructor. The instruction to be given will cover 12 lessons on the study of automobile mechanism and will include the theory of gas engines as well as the repair of autos and tractors.

A. R. Nichols, supervisor of trades and industries of the state board for vocational education is arranging to come to Roseburg Wednesday evening, February 22. At this special instruction in automobile work. A meeting of such persons will be held at the Service Garage at 7:30 p. m. to arrange the details of the courses.

The cost to each person enrolling will be very moderate as one-half of the compensation of the instructor is paid out of the federal funds at the disposal of the state board.

Anyone desiring to ask and questions concerning the school may call on Supt. M. S. Hamm.

Idah McGlone Gibson

The Thrilling and Dramatic Story of Virginia Fairfax's Ambition!

A WOMAN'S FIRST LOVE

"We can't stop loving anyone just because we want to, Kitty," I remarked when she said she hoped that I would not love Theo. "Nobody should know that better than yourself. I do love Theo, and it makes me very angry at myself when I think that after this ridiculous escapade of his I cannot put him out of my heart.

"I expect that he was very lonely, Kitty. Probably he found that Maud Sunson was not going to be around. She may have kept up her grouch which she developed early in the day over our love scene on the lot. It was then, probably, that he thought of me after his 'after the theatre relaxation,' and not finding me, his wanting me became an obsession and he determined to find me at any cost.

"I believe that Theo does not care for his own society."

"No, he must always have someone pouring flattery at his feet," interrupted Kitty scornfully. "A woman is always ready to excuse the man she loves. I did it for Julian—until I got over loving him."

"Can a girl get over loving easily, Kitty?"

"No, it's the hardest thing in the world for a woman to stop loving. I guess Nature has made us that way. Why, do you know that when I saw Julian Thorndyke coming toward me I could not help but remember—wreck as he was—the beautiful dreams I had had when I first knew him. In spite of me, my mind went back to the handsome, care-free Julian Thorndyke that I fell in love with.

"Memory of her first love always stays with a woman. A man has a much better forgettery, but a woman puts all the happy days, the happy hours, the loving words away in fragrant lavender and keeps them next to her heart."

"An elderly woman once told me, Virgie, that she has been sitting across the breakfast table from her husband when some little thing would bring back the memory of a long forgotten episode with, or act of, her first sweetheart. And immediately the somewhat settled-looking business man who faced here faded from her view and in his stead she saw the wonderful youth who first loved her coming toward her in the afternoon sunshine."

"You know, Kitty," I protested, "I think that was rather horrid on the part of the wife—even if she did have those feelings. She should have kept them to herself. What did you say to her?" I asked curiously.

"Probably just what you would have said. I remarked, 'Did it ever occur to you that possibly the settled-looking business man across the table from you might also be thinking of a girl that never had looked like you?'"

"How did it affect her when you asked that?"

"Well, I rather think I stopped her. But I am sure it is true—both men and women—they never forget their first love, or rather they never forget the exquisite innocence and beauty of their first love."

"There is certainly nothing very beautiful about my first love, Kitty. I shall be ashamed to meet Theo tomorrow on the lot."

"Oh, he will have forgotten all about it," replied Kitty.

But he had not. When I arrived at the studio the next morning we were all told that Mr. Stratton was very ill and that they would only take some scenes in which he did not appear. As I was only in scenes with him, they dismissed me.

I went back to the apartment very much worried, and yet I did not dare call up to inquire. The day seemed to drag itself along on leaden feet, but toward night I received a letter by special messenger. It read:

"Dear Baby Child:

"I am so glad, Virgie, sweetheart, you are a baby child, for you will probably be more apt to forgive me than if you were a real grownup woman of experience. Then you would perhaps feel that my foolishness was unpardonable—but, oh, dearest, you cannot know the raging hell I was in last night—you cannot know what your dear presence has meant to me ever since that day on the train, for I know now that you have exerted an influence over me that was only for good. It is like a drink of cold water to a man dying of thirst.

"Child, do you know that I am about a half century older than you. In years I am only a little over a decade, but in experience and living I am so old—but sometimes I stand aghast before you.

"I can hardly realize anyone can have the outlook on life you have—so enthusiastic, so trusting, so loyal, so true to the best and most worth while. It makes me very humble. I am always trying to remember if I were ever as young and innocent as you are.

"Dear, even in my youth I never met a girl who was as humbly real as you, who was as generous—I don't mean generous in the way of giving money but in giving yourself—I have never known you, dear, when you seemed to consider what you were going to get out of a thing. You simply give—give of yourself, your sympathy, your talents, your enthusiasm to everyone, seeming perfectly serene in the knowledge that no matter how much you give you will still have more to offer.

"This is the reason, Baby Child, why I have the courage to ask you to give me the blessing of your divine forgiveness and not to despair when I think how terribly I must have appeared to you last night.

"Dear heart, forgive me—not because I deserve it, but because I love you.

"THEO."

Cigarette Law Being Violated

The law governing the smoking of cigarettes by minors in Roseburg is being violated extensively, and steps have been taken to correct this condition. The sellers of cigarettes and tobacco have been notified and warned of the intention of the officers in enforcing this law, without fear or favor, and if necessary to stop the practice of allowing minors to purchase. An example will be made of one or two, or as many dealers as may be found guilty of violating the law in this particular. A minor is a person under 21 years of age, yet on the streets of the city are youths 14 to 18 years of age, who have openly been guilty of violating this law, and some one is supplying them with cigarettes and tobacco. Every person, whether a police officer or not, has the right, and it is the solemn duty of all law abiding citizens, to report any violation of law to the proper officer, and if necessary make a sworn statement of their observation of this nature, so that our laws may be enforced and respected, and thus assist the officers in their endeavor to protect the youth of our city against those, who for a small profit, would wreck their physical, mental and moral development. By united cooperation in this matter on the part of parents, and all law abiding citizens, the officers will be able to break up this practice of open violation of this very important law, in a very short time.

The officers had a meeting at the City Hall with Judge Whipple, and the judge says that to fine the boys seems to have no effect, and from now on it will probably be a jail sentence and the sentence will not be suspended.

GLENDALE NEWS.

The funeral of Mrs. Carrie M. Dale, who passed away at her home in this city on Saturday, the 18th, was held at the Lutheran church at 2:30 p. m., Rev. R. O. Storli officiating. A large crowd of sorrowing relatives and friends were in attendance. Interment was made at the Masonic cemetery in this city. The floral offerings were very beautiful. Mrs. Dale had been a resident of this city for nearly twenty years. She was a woman of high culture and of most pleasing personality. She held a place in our city that will be hard to fill. She was a teacher in the Lutheran Sunday school at the time she was stricken with her last illness. Our city is bereft of one of its most useful and popular women. Mrs. Dale has hailed the invisible door that we all must signal, and her trust in a risen redeemer has carried her pure spirit through the pearly gates, where she has heard the welcome home of the angelic choristers who stand in the presence of the "King in His beauty." May we all emulate her virtues and profit by her beautiful example as we pay tribute to her pure and spotless life.

Jointly with other residents of this valley, when Mr. and Mrs. George Nenner, Sr., made their home here for several years, we tender our deepest sympathy to the bereaved wife and thir sons in the irreparable loss of a wise father, who surely has left the impress of his own splendid manhood upon his sons, all of whom have attained to useful stations in their life work. The name of Nenner is honored wherever heard, and how those splendid sons will cherish the mother who is bereft of her husband. May they all in the tenets of her beautiful religion help her to bear her loss. And friends of former years in this valley express heartfelt sympathy for them all.

Lately in a snow storm we made a brief trip over to Linn and Lane counties. Eugene is a splendid city, and we noted vast differences since our last visit. We were a guest of Mr. and Mrs. P. F. Roberts at their comfortable home on Seventh avenue. We noted two eight page dailies in Eugene, and they are of most excellent mechanical work and replete with news of the state and nation. Also we noted that each has a lot of local correspondence from every section of Lane county. Later on we will go again and we shall visit the offices of the newspapers. Also we will visit the public schools, as we were impressed with the new idea of playground supervision as being in use at the Washington school. The boys and girls have separate playgrounds, and the grade teachers alternately go out with their pupils. The result is no factions or disagreements are possible, and if a pupil is absent it is observed at once. Returning home to Glendale, we feel sure our town is the very best town on the map, and our newspaper always right, because our editor sees things and he does not condone wrong doing or permit injustice without rebuke. We feel real glad we made up with our sheriff and our other officers, because we helped elect them and we like them all.

PAULINE FREDERICK PLANS HER HONEYMOON IN SADDLE

Pauline Frederick and her husband Dr. C. A. Rutherford, whose marriage at Santa Anna, California, a few days ago was a surprise to the noted actress' family and friends and hosts of admirers, is planning a romantic honeymoon tour through the wonderful Yosemite Valley, in California, on horseback, to be begun as soon as she can complete "The Glory of Clementina," and the next picture she has planned for R-C Pictures, which will be "The Woman Bread."

Dr. Rutherford, who is Miss Frederick's second cousin, is 45 years of age. He has a prosperous medical practice at Seattle, but will move to Los Angeles, where his wife has her work in motion pictures, and where also she has a beautiful estate, which she hesitates to leave. Like Miss Frederick, he is an ardent outdoor sportsman, and the proposal to tour Yosemite Valley by horseback, appeals as strongly to him as it does to his bride.

"I am supremely happy," Miss Frederick said at the studio where she reported to her director, Emile Chautard, on the Monday morning following her marriage, "and will continue my work before the camera. We have no definite plans just now, except that we will have our honeymoon trip through Yosemite Valley, horseback. We will not let even that proposed pleasure interfere with my work for R-C Pictures, however. We will go right ahead and finish the pictures we have in hand before I take a day off or change my working schedule in any way."

This is Miss Frederick's third marriage. Her first husband was Frank A. Andrews, an architect, and her second was Willard Mack, playwright and actor, who recently married for the fourth time.

REAL FIGHT IN "FIGHTING BILL"

The average human loves a good fight, one of the kind where you see them give and take, real live action, punches that you can almost hear the thud a they land. That is the kind you see in Bill Fairbank's production, "Fighting Bill," playing at the Majestic theatre for the last time tonight. In the boxing match between Bill Fairbanks and Jean LaRogue any audience is bound to rise up out of their seats and yell encouragement to whichever one of the fighters they favor. You see Bill smiling, believing it to be an exhibition match. You see Jean crouch, calculating, figuring on hauling off up before he wakes up to the realization of what he intends doing. You hear the gong, the fight is on. You see Jean dancing in, starting to force Bill all over the ring. The round saves Bill from a knockout in the first round. But in the second round things are changing. Bill wakes up to the realization of what Jean is up to and they go at it hammer and tongs. In the third round Bill's clean living shows as against Jean's dissipation and the result is Bill lands a haymaker that puts Jean down and out for the count.

NEW, TRUE AND NO LOVE

$60 per, Love's Stipend

A class referendum taken at Goucher College, Baltimore, shows the girl seniors of that institution think a young couple can safely wed if the man is assured an income of $60 a week. Few of them thought it necessary to have an income of more than $1,000, and only one insisted the man of her choice should show earnings of $5,000 a year. One young miss set her limit at $250, without a child, and at $1,000, with one child.

Wives Easy to Get

An American mining engineer, visiting in England, decided he wanted to take an English woman to wife. He appealed to the mayor of Folkstone to help him. The mayor published his plea and several thousand answers were received. One widow wrote that she did not think much of married life, from her former experience, but that she was willing to take a chance with an American. The replies were not confined to the women of Folkstone but came from all parts of England.

Blessed Lads

Four brothers started a wood farm at Burnsville, Jackson County, N. Y., more than half a century ago and prospered in their enterprise. They decided that bringing a wife or wives into the happy wood chopping household would put a damper on matters. They just like being loyal and only sons of brothers. Andrew Clyde of Hyde Park, Staten Island, now has the first grey mark against. Jason Longstreet died recently. John Lewis died a few years ago and William was killed by a trolley car a year later. They were all well known characters on Staten Island and Andrew, who inherited the property of his brothers, is the only one of the family remaining.

Murderous Lass

Sarah Khan, 17 years old, a Brooklyn girl, wished to give her family the advantage of living in a fine country. She wanted to postpone her marriage to Nathan Ring, until the would earn enough money to bring her relatives over from Russia. She did so, even with Ring's money and he found a new affiliation that she must marry him at once. When she refused he shot and killed her and turned the revolver on himself, inflicting a serious wound from which the chances are he will not recover.

Love's Target

Breaking her husband, Charles E. V. Lee, broker and oil promoter of West Islip, Long Island, New York, threw two bullets at her and followed them with the platter on which the fowl reposed. Mrs. Jane D. Lees asked the court to award her alimony of $250 a week and counsel fees of $1,000. In her separation suit. The court awarded her $75 a week alimony and counsel fee of $500. Lees makes a sweeping denial of the charges against him and claims that his wife took his name in vain in front of a New York City hotel one evening, and drove away in it leaving him "flat."

He Likes to Blame

Frank and Francesca were two fiercely loving of whom Dante wrote centuries ago. They were made immortal by the action of all "modern" as well Paolo's brother who supposed to be the husband of the fair Francesca. All of which leads to the fact that Francesca Paola Franceschi, of Passaic, N. J., arrested the attention of Vito and Filomena Vecchio, for his marital troubles, but the "it was" he blames on his wife's sister and her mother. He claims his wife constantly longed for the presence of her sister and her mother, but that when they came into his home constant quarrels and bickering resulted.

Dodging Alimony

Mrs. Harriet Lockley has brought suit against her husband, from whom she has secured a degree of separation, asking that he be forced to give security for the payment of the alimony awarded her by the court. The former lives out in the state of Ohio, having been made an independent, by her father. Garry H. Lockley, her husband, is 70 years old. He is the son of a wealthy banker and was in great demand as a beau before he came of age. The separation is made in the suit that he has threatened to file all his money in his children to dodge the payment of alimony.

No Place Like

Dorothy Wells of Mansfield, Long Island, N. Y., refused to live with her husband, Lee Wells, because his mother lived with them. Dorothy's mother and that four of six children. As a result he left her, to whom he owes a lot of money. Dorothy's lawyer says that he has $7,000.
