

Consider the Sports Suit and The First Day of Spring

SPRING, of all the seasons of the year, is the one for which one ought to prepare weeks ahead. For it is one of life's most dreadful tragedies to be caught out during the first shining days of spring in one's old winter clothes. It makes one feel so bedraggled and orphan-like and out of key with the universal spring sympathy. One should have at least one smart suit and hat to meet the first blasty day which it should fall before the official twenty-first of March, or many weeks after.

The little mandarin jacket sketched at the right is a good model to have on hand for such emergencies. It is of brush wool with inserts of crocheted woolen flowers bordering the coat and sleeves, and forming the collar. It is loose and smart, and bisque color. It should be worn over a matching skirt in wool or knitted skirt. Brush wool comes in a variety of colors, perhaps the newest and most popular being periwinkle blue. This model would be most attractive in that color.

The hat with this jacket is of hand-woven viscina and wool, a very good sports viscina of materials. It is being done in all colors, but the pepper and salt and tweed color combinations are the most unusual.

For early season week-end motor trips when one simply must have a smart spring motor bonnet and a warm one as well, a photograph above is shown in the practical suggestion. It is worn by Lila Lee in "Is Matrimony a Failure?" A Paramount picture, and is of emerald green duvetyne trimmed in matching wool and faced in a light spring green. At each side on the inside of the hatband there is a narrow scarf snapped on—these can be wound under the chin and once around the neck, improvising a scarf and a hood. And again, they can be drawn up over the brim and passed around the crown turban fashion. And again, they can be un-snapped at midday's will and tucked into her coat pocket. The practicality of this model is evident.

The sketch at the left shows another short jacket of checked serge trimmed in periwinkle and worn with a periwinkle skirt. It is in blue and grey, and is worn with a cherry silk fallie hat.

ADVICE TO LOVELORN AND OTHERS

BY MRS. ELLISBURY
 (Daily Column of Questions and Answers conducted by a Woman Who Knows. Address your Letters to Mrs. Ellisbury, Care of our News-Review.)

Dear Mrs. Ellisbury: We wish you would tell us what would be appropriate refreshments for a "hard times party" and what would be suitable decorations.

SCHOOL GIRLS.
 Ans. Why not serve baked beans, and brown bread, bean soup, hash, or any of the plain things that are good at home, but odd when served at a party. If they are sufficiently appetizing it would not be necessary to serve anything else. Or you could serve a mock meal. Thin slices of coarse bread and no butter, or something like that, and follow this with "the regular refreshments, after you had led your guests to believe that was all they would receive. If you served baked beans, brown bread and coffee, that is all that would be necessary. Decorate the rooms with bunches of weeds, and ordinary "bunches. Remove as much of the furniture as possible, and substitute as many broken down chairs as you can get. Drape them with pieces of calico and other old rags.

Dear Mrs. Ellisbury: I am engaged and have been for about six months. We have not set a date for our marriage yet, as we both know that it cannot be right away. Should I begin getting things for a trousseau now, or do you think it would be foolish? If I embroider things for a house, should I put his initials on them or mine?
ENGAGED.
 Ans. Surely it is time for you to begin your trousseau. That is a great part of the pleasure in getting married, the embroidering and making of the beautiful things you will want for yourself and for your house. I would not put a few things with his initials, but not many. "There's many a slip," you know, and anyway, monograms are not so favored as they were a few years ago.

Dear Mrs. Ellisbury: My husband and I have been married for five years, and we sincerely love each other. We have never been separated for more than a day at a time during all the time we have been married. We have three children. We have always been so happy that I was sure I was the luckiest woman in the world, until just lately my husband seems to have changed. He seems nervous and irritable, and the children seem to irritate him instead of please him. Sometimes in the evenings he gets up and slams down the paper and goes to bed real early, leaving the children and I to spend the rest of the evening at home. I don't know what to make of it. I am positive there are no business worries, and that there is not another woman. Can you help me? I am really worried. He is getting worse instead of better, and none of our little homely pleasures seem to in-

WORRIED WIFE.
 Ans. I think it is a case of too much domesticity. The first five years go quickly, with babies arriving and a home to make, and then, invariably, there comes a slackening up time, when a man begins to look around him, and wonder if he is letting all the pleasures of the world go by him. I think perhaps he is just plain bored, bored with his home, his wife and his children. Do not think this means he does not love you, because he does. Very probably, if you would own up to it, you might be just a little bored yourself. I think a vacation would do you both good. Send your husband away for a while whether you can afford it or not. Let him have a good rest away from you all, and you do the same thing. You will find that you will both love each other more when you will come home again. Arrange to do the same thing with each year. Before he comes home, buy yourself some pretty new clothes, and arrange to go out more. Don't ever let the home life get monotonous again. You will find that this care will repay you many times over, and keep your husband at home when he might be driven to something much more serious.

When in the trouble see getting the Tire Man.

The Shapes of Eggs.
 An expert recently entertained the Zoological society of London with a mathematical discussion of the differences in the shape of eggs. A few eggs, like those of the owl and the tortoise, are spherical or nearly so; a few, like the grebe's or the cornucopia's are elliptical, with symmetrical ends; the great majority, like the hen's, are oval, or blunter at one end than at the other.

The hen's eggs are always laid blunt end foremost. Eggs which are of large size relatively to the parent birds. The yolks of eggs are spherical, whatever the form of the entire egg may be. This is shown to be due to their being enclosed in a fluid, the "white," which makes the shell practically constant.

Safety First.
 Variet—1 pethee haste, str knight, to the rescue of a wickly imprisoned in yonder town by a wickly ogre.
 Knight—Oh, bother! This is my day off. Why don't you go and save her yourself?
 Variet—She is my wife, str knight, and she refuses to allow me to engage in so perilous an enterprise.—Punch.

SHOULD EAT MORE CABBAGE

Diet Experts of Cornell's College of Agriculture Recommend it as Article of Agriculture.

Experts at Cornell's college of agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y., urge a wider use of cabbage, asserting that this succulent vegetable should be more generally included in the diet. It is rich in iron and other mineral salts and contains a small amount of growth-promoting substance. Cabbage is eaten much more by the Spanish, French and Italian races than by Americans, largely because Americans do not know how to cook it, it is contended.

"Cabbage," says a statement from the college of agriculture "plunged into boiling salted water, and cooked uncovered for 20 minutes, no longer, will be a delicate light green color, tender and easily digested. Long cooking, in a tightly-covered kettle, produces a dark, brownish mess in which chemical changes have taken place that make it almost indigestible.

"Food specialists at Cornell suggest boiled cabbage served with lamb, mutton or beef, escalloped cabbage with cheese sauce, fried cabbage with minced onion, cabbage cooked in milk and water, or baked with hamburger or frankfurters, lady cabbage, sweet or sour cabbage, or filled cabbages. Recipes for these dishes are found in most cook books.

"For salads, cabbage gives an almost endless variety; with apple and onion, or with onion, celery or caraway seed, with salmon, shrimp, tomatoes, carrots, green peppers, or even pineapple shredded cabbage makes an excellent combination. In general, cabbage salads are best served with a boiled dressing."

Compass on Crossing the Equator.
 The compass needle does not turn around in passing from one hemisphere into the other. The north-seeking end of the compass needle has no greater significance or meaning in the southern hemisphere than the south-seeking end of the needle has in the northern hemisphere. The compass needle is a piece of magnetized steel. It has its own positive and negative poles, or north and south poles, just like the earth. The needle and its lines of force align themselves with the earth's lines of force. In the northern hemisphere the north magnetic pole exerts the dominating influence of the needle, so it points to that pole. The south end of the needle is disregarded. In the southern hemisphere the south magnetic pole exerts the dominating influence on the needle and it points to that pole, the north end of the needle in this case being disregarded. The needle does not reverse in going from one hemisphere to another. The south end of the needle becomes the guide in the southern hemisphere, as the north end is the guide in the northern hemisphere.
