VIRGINIA MEETS JULIAN THORNDYKE

There was something queer about Kitty's pronunciation of coming disaster. At the time I thought it was a realization of how utterly impossible was any happy outcome for her in her love for John Storm.

As she said: "Somehow I feel the worst is yet to come," her face fairly grew grey and pinched.

To change the subject I asked quickly: "Was John Storm at the studio today?"

"No, dear, and I was glad of it, especially as Julian had his big scenes where, in a frenzy, he stabbed the man I was about to marry."

"Isn't that a big part for a man, Tony Melville picked out of the street?"

"That's Tony all over, you know. As soon as he found that Julian had been an actor he enlarged his part and put in all this extra stuff. Julian touched me for money enough to buy two suits of clothes and just after a 'shot' he looks quite presentable. His part as now written brings me in contact much more with Julian than I wanted or expected. One, when he came near he clutched my arm.

"Look!" and Kitty pulled up her chin sleeve and showed, just above her elbows, the cruel blue marks of four fingers and a thumb on her soft, white flesh.

"Oh, Kitty, I am so sorry," and I laid my cheek down upon it.

"Yes, it does look ugly, doesn't it? Lend me that rose colored heart of yours, dear, and I'll wind it around that arm so that it won't show. We must hurry and dress."

I was quite excited at the thought of going to one of the more or less famous Hollywood parties. When we arrived and Kitty pulled up to me, one after another, the names of the men and women of the screen and after each she tagged their salaries or their pecuniaries, naturally I felt that at last I was one of them.

As I had the women who are in pictures are more beautiful in the flesh than on the silver screen. There is nothing so cruel, so absolutely ruthless and relentless as the camera. Some people have said that the camera can not lie but it always lies one way or another. You never see an actor on the screen as he really is. Some of the most popular men on the screen—men who are acclaimed for their good looks are very ugly off, and some very pretty women get their contracts for the way they look for the way they look on the screen.

"It would almost seem," Bruce Walters observed, "as though there was something diabolically personal in the camera. It shows such prejudices and such favoritism. One of the most charming girls I know in the profession, a hard worker and one who has beauty and ambition, failed simply because the camera would have none of her. And yet anyone meeting her face to face would say: 'What a splendid subject for making pictures!'"

I was very much interested in Bruce Walters' conversation and only awoke with a little start when Kitty said: "Virgie, allow me to present to you Julian Thorndyke."

I looked up quickly. A young man growing slightly bald with very brilliant dark eyes, an unimpaired white skin drawn over his cheek bones toward me without smiling.

His lips were curled and I thought to myself unconsciously that he had coaxed them.

"Miss Dalton tells me that you are her pal, Miss Winston."

"I have never been able to find out just what that word 'pal' means," Mr. Thorndyke, "I am very fond of Miss Dalton. We live together, you know."

He looked at me most intently and I felt a little chill run down my back.

"How do you like the moving pictures, Mr. Thorndyke?"

"Not at all. After this picture I am going to take Miss Dalton back on the stage. She has told you, I presume, that we had an act together a few years ago?"

My heart stopped for, as he said this, the red lips curled in a sardonic smile over cruel, small, unconsciously white teeth and then—as though his lips had suddenly dried, the tip of his tongue came out and moistened them.

I was reminded of a snake as he did this. "Will you dance, Miss Winston?" he asked peevishly.

"No, I don't dance well enough to try it with men I know so slightly."

"Then I will cut in on Kitty," he said. And a day later, uncertainly, he rattled, he walked toward Kitty who was dancing with Bruce Walters.

Unconsciously he drew her into his arms. Her face changed. Fear dissolved it and she lost her step again and again. I could see that he was restraining with her. Finally, just they reached me, I heard her say: "I can't dance with you, Julian. Honestly I can't. My feet won't trek."

"You'll soon learn again, my girl," he asserted, "for you and I are going to leave this place as soon as we have finished this picture. I learned today that you made a haul of a nice little sum from some man or woman and with it we will go into New York and look the big time."

"Oh, Julian, don't ask me to do that, please!"

"Can that be my fearless Kitty?" I asked myself in surprise, and I moved over to where they had stopped on the dance floor just a few steps beyond me.

"I am not feeling well, Kitty. Shall we go home?"

"I'll go with you," spoke up Julian.

"Don't let me take you away, Mr. Thorndyke. We don't need you."

Julian bent his head toward Kitty's ear and I heard his venomous question: "Are you going to meet that gossip shark?"

TOMORROW—Letters From Home.

Eugene Lawyer Is Disbarred

EUGENE, Feb. 22.—Leon A. Edmundson, Eugene attorney, is disbarred from the further practice of law in Oregon in an order written by Justice Brown and handed down by the supreme court this morning.

Disbarment proceedings were instituted against Edmundson several months ago by the grievance committee of the Lane county bar association, on grounds of misconduct in his profession and conviction of misdemeanors involving moral turpitude. Edmundson, it was charged, had been found guilty of violating the prohibition act.

In his opinion Justice Brown declares that Edmundson is a violator of the law.

"It is made his duty by statute and by oath to support the constitution and laws of the United States and of this state," the opinion reads. "He has not only failed to uphold the laws but he has knowingly become a lawbreaker. He has violated a statute denouncing as a crime the act of willfully and knowingly, with intent to injure and defame, publishing of and concerning another false and scandalous matter. Such is the character of Edmundson the man and citizen."

The court orders that Edmundson be disbarred from the practice of law in any of the courts of this state and that his name be stricken from the roll of attorneys in this court.

crystal which he holds in his hand, the mysterious glass globe which is used by the Hindu, he gets the questions and answers. It seems almost unbelievable that a man could have this power, yet to Rex is to believe in him. He does not claim to be supernatural, nor does he do anything which cannot be done by many other men but he does claim that he can call your question, even though you may hold it in your hand. He asks those who are non-believers to witness his performance that he may convince them that there is something more to mental telepathy than they were willing to believe.

Rex presents an act which is clean, wholesome and without, most baffling. He is not a magician nor does he resort to cheap trickery to entertain his audience, but he will give all who see him, ample food for thought for days to come.

S. P. TRAINMAN IS ACCUSED.

EUGENE, Feb. 21.—Ben Chambers, a Southern Pacific brakeman, was indicted by the Lane county grand jury yesterday on a charge of statutory rape, alleged to have been committed on an 11-year-old girl of this city.

Chambers, who runs between Eugene and Corvallis, was arrested in the latter city night before last and brought to Eugene yesterday. He is at present in jail under $2000 bond fixed by Justice of the Peace Jesse G. Wells and which he is unable to furnish.

The grand jury will make no report today as it is a legal holiday, but will report on a number of indictments Thursday.

The officers who have investigated the charges against Chambers declare the crime to have been an exceptionally revolting one.

BALL FOR MOVIE STARS

Betty Compson and Tom Moore, were guests of honor at a ball given recently in Masonic Hall, Truckee, California, by a large delegation of San Francisco Shriners. Their wives and families, who came up in a special train for an outing in the snow.

Miss Compson and Mr. Moore head the cast of "The Law and the Woman" production, "Over the Border," an adaptation by A. S. LeVine of a story by Sir Gilbert Parker.

"MOTS EATER" SPECTACULAR.

It required 5000 miles of travel to film "The Lotz Eater," an Associated First National attraction which will be shown at the Auditor's Theatre for an engagement of two days, starting tonight.

The script called for scenes in Florida, California and New York City, and the director, Marshall Neilan, transported his entire staff from Los Angeles, where work was started in the east for the finishing touches.

John Barrymore, the famous actor, is the star of the production. The story is based on the book by Albert Payson Terhune and George Ade, the dean of American humorists, wrote the dialogue.

"The Lotz Eater" is one of the most spectacular pictures ever filmed, combining the best talent in the industry with a story of unusual strength.
