ALWAYS 'SKELETON' AT FEAST Lodge Initiates Twenty Members

Egyptian Merrymakers Had Custom Which Must Have Been Something of a Check on Revelry.

Accounts which have come down of Egyptian banquets indicate that among the wealthy people and those Egyptians who were "in society" they were very elaborate affairs with a great variety of rich and high-priced and high-priced food and many wines—wines rare and strong.

But no matter how jovial and happy and hilarious the feast, a mummy was there as a reminder of death. At the conclusion of the most substantial part of the banquet and when the wine began to flow most freely, an attendant, perhaps one of the waiters, would carry around a coffin carved in the image of a dead body lying in state, and as the Greek historian, Herodotus tells us, "made as like as possible in color and workmanship, and in size generally about one or two cubits in length." The business of the writer was to show this to each member of the gay and jocular company and say, "Look upon this, then drink and enjoy yourself, for when dead you will be like this."

Twenty new candidates were initiated into the Knights of Pythias lodge at the meeting held last night. The lodge has been putting on a drive for new members, having obtained a special dispensation covering this month. The class last night was the largest ever initiated at one time by the local lodge, but it is expected that this record will be broken before the campaign ends. Next Wednesday the lodge will hold another session at which time the Page degree will be given. Grand Vice Chancellor M. P. Hardesty will be present and a social time enjoyed.

N. Y. Commissioner Of Health Is For Corsets

Medical science is giving its approval of the mandate issued by fashion experts and designers that corsets should be worn by Misses. While physicians agree with the fashion experts they do so for a different reason, considering only the health of women and not their appearance. One of the latest medical authorities to come out for the modern corset is Dr. Royal S. Copeland, Health Commissioner of New York City. "Woman's body needs the support provided by the modern corset and because of this, it is an aid to health," says Dr. Copeland. "The old fashioned corset, with its many bones and the fashion of having it tightly laced was not a good thing for women. It bound the body, preventing its normal functioning. But constructive tendencies have been corrected and, if properly fitted, it furnishes a needed support for women and I see it a distinct aid to health. The disarding of it is merely a fad, which is not supported by any hygienic reason. "Gynecology also enters into the consideration of whether it should be worn or not," continued Dr. Copeland. "Corsets, to my mind, have a psychological value in promoting efficiency and contentment, if they are well-fitted."

AROUND THE TOWN

FALCONRY AN ANCIENT SPORT

Amusement, Practiced in East, Can Be Traced to Period That Antedates Era of Christianity.

Falconry, the art of training falcons and hawks to the chase, has been traced back to a period before the Christian era. It was practiced in the East and also in Europe long before its introduction into England. The English kings used to amuse themselves with this sport, which was for a long time the leading amusement, such as baseball is in America today.

Falconers use two kinds of birds—the long-winged, dark-eyed falcon and the short-winged, yellow-eyed hawk. The former take their prey by rising above it in the air and swooping at it from a considerable height and striking it to the ground; the latter pursue to a straight line, and overtaking the object of the chase by superior speed, clutch it and bring it down.

The larger falcons are sent after winged prey of all kinds, crows, magpies, rooks, herons and wild fowl. The smaller falcons, such as the merlin and hobby, are flown at larks; while of the short-winged hawks, the sparrowhawk is flown at blackbirds and thrushes, partridges early in the season, and quails, the goshawk taking pheasants, partridges and wild fowl, rabbits and hares.

With all birds of prey the females are invariably larger and more powerful than the males, and the sexes are consequently selected according to the game they have to pursue.

Roma Disaster Investigation On

(By United Press.)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—The board of inquiry appointed by Major General Patrick is now examining scores of witnesses of the Roma disaster at Langley field. The board will probably report within a few days. Patrick says he will report the heroism of Sergeant Chapman, of St. Joseph, Mo., who saved four lives. Congressional investigation will come when the army air service appropriations are considered. The testimony will be taken to decide whether to continue the development of dirigibles and the manufacture of helium.
