BOLSHEVISTS OF THE ANCIENT WORLD.

Socialists often speak as if their idea was a modern and progressive one, the outgrowth of the greater intelligence of this era. As a matter of fact, the socialistic idea is one of the most ancient notions of human history, which has been tried out again and again, and found not to accomplish satisfactory results. In savage tribes of ancient and modern times, private property is not usually respected. Land was at one time held in common in most of the ancient countries. But when the idea became established that the individual can retain for himself the property which he has created by his labor, then people began to advance, because an incentive is given to ambition. The Spartans of ancient Greece tried out long before the Christian era, the ideas that are substantially the same as under bolshevism. They were persuaded as a mean of improving social conditions, to divide up their land and other possessions and all eat at common tables. But the remedy seemed to be worse than the disease. The city did not endure and no trace of it remains today. They developed no arts, no religion, no education. There was a failure to reward individual ambition, and no one had incentive to improve himself. Meanwhile the cities that did encourage individual initiative by allowing private property, like Athens and Rome, became centers of lasting influence. The early Christian church tried out the idea of-communism, having all things in common. These men and women were people of noble and unselfish purity. If socialism would have worked under any possible conditions, it would have worked with these people. But they could not make it go. They found that it hindered their progress, and they gave it up. It is not probable that the modern world, with all its selfishness and indelence, can do any better than these people who lived close to the message and spirit of Christ.

There seems to be a widespread disposition on the part of the people of the state to abolish the public service commission. The thought is prevalent that the actions of that body is not conducive to the best interests of the state at large and that other means should be devised to meet the demands of the public. No excuse for the commission's action on the recent telephone decision is accepted. The public is aroused to such an extent that it is determined there shall be some redress. Petitions are already being prepared to recall every member at the next primary election. This action naturally casts a stigma on the present members of the commission, leading to the inference that the public has been "knifed." But what will be the result of a change in personnel of the public service commission. If there has been any loose work on the part of the present members in the telephone rate decision, what assurance have we that a new commission will obtain better results? If an injustice has been done by the commission's recent decision, and there are thousands of people who are sincere in is that all your underclothes? this belief, immediate steps should be taken to devise a broader this belief, immediate steps should be taken to devise a broader and saner way of handling these very important problems. It will take more than a recall to accomplish concrete results.

Retail merchants in many places often remark that the people who give them the most trouble in collections are not the ones who have limited means. In one town where the railroad track Can't you wear more underclothes. divides the community, those on one side are supposed to have Than your corset and your hose? more wealth. But the business men of the place have said they would rather extend credit to a family in the section where the ordinary folks live, than to one in the wealthier district. People ordinary folks live; than to one in the wealthier district. People who get into the habit of spending money freely, are often careless as to their financial standing.
