

Prepare for Busy Days

Harvest time you may need repair parts to prevent losing part of your crop.

Have you thought of it? What condition is your farm-operating equipment in at the present time?

Check up your wants and place your orders for repairs now. Prepare for emergencies that always arise.

Repairs ordered early save long distance telephone bills, express charges, postage and annoyance.

Everyone who operates farm machines and implements must have repairs sooner or later.

Put dollars in your bank account by purchasing your repairs now for International farm machines.

Anticipate your needs and have your machines in running order before you need them.

It means confidence in yourself to be able to say, "Yes, I am prepared for any emergency."

Repairs should be your first thought when getting ready for the busy days that are coming.

Service, such as rendered by the International dealer, is of no value unless you take advantage of it.

The Thrilling and Dramatic Story of Virginia Fairfax's Adventure

THE RESCUE

"After a time the others saw us bobbing about in the waves. A few minutes later Aunt Virginia and Mrs. Chester were ministering to you on the dock.

"You know the rest of the story, dear."

The news of the accident and the rescue spread over the city like wildfire. Some of the papers got out extras.

There were flamboyant notices to the effect that "Eastern Football Hero and Childhood Sweetheart of Virginia Winston, Beautiful Moving Picture Actress, Saves Her from Death," etc., etc.

With the resilience of youth I was all right the morning after the accident.

In the afternoon Eddie arrived all smiles and bubbling over with good health.

"Virginia," he said, "let's take a car drive back into the hills somewhere. I feel like a million dollars, but I don't care for a look at the sea this morning."

"Two minds with but a single thought," I quoted, dancing with joy. Then a blush swept over me. Eddie was looking at me with a strange provocative look—the look of the possessor. "Eddie," I protested, "don't look at me that way. You know what I mean!"

"What did you mean?" he pursued tantalizingly. I did not answer.

"I'm going for a ride with Eddie," I called to Aunt Virginia.

She fluttered in.

"That will be splendid, Virginia. It's so nice of you, too, Eddie. I am sure you'll both enjoy it," she said with a twinkle in her eye. Then she added, "Find a nice quiet place for dinner, and don't keep Virginia out too long in the evening air, laddie."

The sun was dipping lower and lower toward the hills as the motor purred into the mountains. A restful feeling of peace and content settled over me. I leaned back and studied the splendid young figure sitting beside me in the motor. As my eyes roamed over his superb, supple body and lingered on his well-chiseled profile, I thought of a piece of statuary I had admired in the local art gallery. It was "The Discus Thrower." Lost in thought and unconscious of my scrutiny, Eddie was gazing straight ahead. I marvelled, as I contrasted this young god with the worn face and aging form of Theodore Stratton, that I had even been so blinded as to think the rose actor the superior of the two.

Finally we reached a little picturesque spot, high up on the hills, where, on a small table land, stood a characteristic California bungalow, ion of bark-covered logs.

The chauffeur slowed down the car, saying:

"You can get supper here if you wish."

"That will be splendid!" I exclaimed enthusiastically under the spell of the beauty and the companionship of Eddie.

Eddie entered to arrange for dinner. There were apparently few guests at this hour. One other car was parked along the roadside.

"Let's take a walk, Virgie," proposed Eddie as he came back to where I was sitting in the motor. "It will be half an hour before they can serve us."

We strolled away toward the setting sun. The hills were a flame of aure gold and the verdure radiantly beautiful. We seemed lost in a virgin solitude.
