chise as without it. For I believe the majority of women have as well balanted mind as the men, and perhaps as keen a judgment.

But "man" is supreme. He has gained that place some how. But we grant it is his and stand off afar and gaze in wonder and amazement at the many achievements of this superior being man.

gaas in wonder and amazement at the many achievements of this superior being, man.

We grant him the bead of the house and table, too: we grant him without dispute to be, the natural guardian of the children while he lives—but.

I think it a biot on the name of any state that has such a soviet law, that it compells a mother, at the death of her husband, to apply to the court to be appointed guardian of her own children. A mother can go into any coprt ta the land and swear "This is my boy or girl." A child can positively awear to its mother. Can a man do more?

Marriage is a pardnership with only one side. The strongest knot the law can tie is to make of two beings one. So I think that at least in case of death the mother should automatically become head of her family and guardian of her minor children. If she proves unfaithful to the trust, then let the court proceed. But I feel sure, if weighed in the scales with man, when it comes to the care and protection of her children, few would be found wanting.

How many fathers today, if they had to choose between a can of Tuxedo or Prince Albert and a pair of shoes for their babe at the same price, would tell the kid to stay in the house where it belonged and take his usual smoke? What would a mother do? There are exceptions, of course on both sides, but the averace. So with due respect to "man" and full appreciation of the wonderful things he stands for—

I still maintain the law is unjust, for if a mother hasn't paid the price to become at least second to her children, no court can give her a right.

We all know that "man" is a very superior animal. The greatest and cleverest of all created beings, but—
There never was a "man" so great, so powerful, so excited, but what had a woman for a mother.

And ii is to you for that mother's right, that I wish to appeal.

Now, I'm not a feminist. I do not believe that this old world would was along just as well without "man." I believe that the le a useful necessity, and an important fraction in the great whole.
