Love's Masquerade

A Dramatic Story of Love and Romance
By Leah McGone Gibson

THE AMERICAN BEAUTY

"I dropped into one of the hotels to meet my wife and friend one day at tea," continued Glendening's letter. "I was bored to death at the thought of having to do this, for I hate tea and I hate to dance with my own wife—especially in the afternoon."

When a man does his duty by dancing with his wife, it is quite as sorrowful as a dinner without salt, and it is just the same with married kisses. You swoop down toward your wife's upturned face and touch the corner of her mouth or the corner of her ear—as the case may be, and, with a feeling of relief you shout, "Good-bye, darling, I'll be home early tonight, and rush away—only to come home late as usual."

"The only pleasure in either kissing or dancing is that you want to do it with that particular woman more than anything else in the world."

"My wife had, however, insisted that I should dance attendance upon her that afternoon. She had a friend staying with her—one of the two or three women in the world for whom she cared—and as I had decided in my own mind that this was one of the few remaining times that I should have to dance attendance, I would best have her at the hotel and avoid a scene."

"However, I hardly dreamed that out of a clear sky, that day, would come something which would change my whole life."

"As usual I was late and had to listen to the usual nagging comments upon my lack of promptness. And as usual, I said nothing. But after listening to the rapid conversation of my wife and her friend for some moments, I felt a little cold shudder run down my backbone."

"Someone is walking over your grave," quoted my wife's friend, lightly, as she noted my involuntary shiver.

"I turned a little in my chair and looked squarely into the eyes of a woman who affected me as no other woman has ever done."

"It was like an electric shock. She was a glowing beauty, with skin of rose-lilac texture and tint, eyes brilliant and very dark, hair that curled softly about her face, and a smile which disclosed dazzling white teeth."

"My wife's friend, noting the direction of my eyes, said, 'Oh, there's Claire Adams. I remember that she married and came north, but I did not know that she lived here. Don't you remember her, Doris?"

"No, I don't think I ever met her," answered my wife as she looked at the woman coldly, and the conversation closed.

"My eyes kept straying toward the woman, whom I had already mentally christened the American Beauty. Shortly she arose and, giving me a most provocative look, followed the friends with whom she was leaving, out the door."

"Soon after we left and, as I expected, I found that Mrs. Adams had detained her party in the corridor."

"I stopped for a moment, while my wife's friend and she exchanged salutations. Then I was introduced."

"I had been wondering just what I would do when I met her; just how I would feel when I clasped her hand, but, as I did so, I could only think of an American Beauty rose that I wanted to crush—crush against my lips until I had consumed all its fragrance and softness."

"We said only the conventional things that people say on such occasions—formal, meaningless things. My wife seemed colder and more unresponsive than usual—if that was possible. She did not ask Mrs. Adams to come and see their mutual friend at our house, although Mrs. Adams conveyed the impression very plainly that she would like to come."

"There was no way for me to find out just where she lived, for I could not ask her outright."

"My wife's friend rallied me a little when we left, saying that Mrs. Adams had very markedly bestowed her smiles upon me, and added: 'You seemed flattered, Harry.'"

"Before I could answer my wife said, 'Don't you thoroughly detest these flamboyant women who are always looking for compliments?'"

"Oh, Claire's good natured. She's been called beautiful so long that she expects every man to pay homage to her," indifferently answered my wife's friend."

"Well, I think she saw that Harry would never do that," remarked my wife with conviction."

"Oh, I'm sure of that," said my wife's friend, giving me a sly look."

"And all the while, Jim, I was devising ways and means to find out where Claire Adams lived."

"Tomorrow—Glendening's Weakness."

Kolb and Dill Entertain Large Crowd

That Kolb and Dill have lost none of their ability to entertain was proven last night at the Antlers theatre when they appeared in their comedy, "Give and Take." For comical situations and lines, "Give and Take" is one of the best offerings Kolb and Dill have ever presented to the public. The cast was small and each was an artist, and Kolb and Dill themselves seem to gain in popularity with each year.

The orchestra was composed of exceptional musicians each giving a solo between acts one and two. A ladies quartette, beautifully gowned, and with voices far above the average, sang and entertained between acts two and three. The stage setting which was not changed throughout, was of solid mahogany, with elaborate lighting effects.

FINGER PRINTS NEVER CHANGE

Not Even the Smallest Variation Takes Place From Infancy to Extreme Old Age.

The use of finger prints as a means of identification was first made practical and put into operation by Sir William Herschel of the Indian civil service in the police department of Bengal. The locations of the thumb and fingers have, however, attracted the attention of scientists for at least a century.

The ridges and patterns are of four primary types. First, arches, in which the ridges run from one side to the other, but make no backward turn; second, loops, in which some of the ridges make a backward turn but are devoid of twists; third, whorls, in which some of the ridges make a turn through at least one complete circuit; and fourth, composite, where two or more of the first three patterns are combined in the same imprint.

It has been demonstrated that these designs persist unchanged in the smallest detail throughout the individual's life, and that there are no two persons whose imprints are identical. The design on the fingers of a newborn infant are easily recognizable in the same person in old age.

Key to Egyptian Hieroglyphics.

The Rosetta stone, one of the most celebrated archeological discoveries of modern times, is famous for being the key whereby the decipherment of the Egyptian hieroglyphics was made possible. It was found in 1799 near Rosetta, Egypt, by an officer of engineers in the French army, which was then in occupation of that country.

The stone is a slab of black basalt, and bears an inscription in honor of Ptolemy Epiphanes, written in three languages—Greek, demotic and hieroglyphic. As the three inscriptions are of identical significance, the Greek made easy the deciphering of the others.

Until the discovery of the stone archeologists had no key to Egyptian hieroglyphics, but since that time all of Egypt's sculptured literature has been read with ease and much valuable information given to the world.

Advice to Lovelorn and Others

BY MRS. ELLSBURY
A Daily Column of Questions and Answers Conducted by a Woman Who Knows. Address Your Letters to Mrs. Ellsbury, Care Roseburg News-Review.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I expect to take quite a long trip in the near future and be married when I get to the end of my journey. Would a dark blue tailored tricoline suit with black pumps, stockings, gloves and hat be appropriate to be married in? Also would a navy blue crepe de chine dress embroidered in orange and black be good to wear on the train? I am 5 feet 5 inches tall and weigh 127 lbs. How is my weight for my height? And how long should I wear my gresses?

Please print my questions in your column as soon as possible, as I am anxious to know as soon as I can. Thank you. A. F.

Ans. Your ideas on both costumes are very good. The suit would be just the thing for an informal wedding ceremony, and the dress would be very comfortable for train wear, as well as practical. A dress is always more comfortable on the train than a suit.

I cannot tell you how much you should weigh as you did not tell me your age. The length of your skirts would depend some on this also. A good average to go by for skirt length is just half way between the knees and ankles.

Story of Josephson's Life in Magazine

A large picture of Julien Josephson, Roseburg scenario writer, and a short story of his life entitled "Unwept, Unhonored and Unhung," appears in the June issue of the Photoplay magazine. In the story Mr. Josephson tells of his boyhood days in Roseburg. He says in part: "I know all about small towns. I lived in Roseburg, Oregon. My brother and I ran a general store there. I was no good as a storekeeper. A slick traveling man could sell me anything. But I like the town. Everyone who happens to live outside of New York or Chicago doesn't go insane, although that's what novelists want us to believe. No sir. We have pretty lively times, parties, movies and automobile rides. First you get to know your neighbor, then you get used to him and finally you love him." Mrs. Josephson also receives a nice mention in the article, and they are compared with the Will Rogers family in that they do not mix in Hollywood film parties.

Moore Studio to Be Moved

Mrs. L. B. Moore, of the Moore Studio of Music, has secured the building at 221 Jackson street for the new location of the school for music. The present location in the Dell Sisters' building has become too small for the large classes in music. The new location which has just been secured will be thoroughly remodeled with two rooms for private teaching and a class room in the rear of the building and the front room will be used for a display room for pianos and sheet music. Mrs. Moore is the local representative for the Sherman Clay company and has the agency for 12 different makes of pianos besides player pianos and the Duo-Art piano. The new location which is just north of the Water and Light office, will be much larger than the former location and will give a much better opportunity for the display of pianos.
