A PERIOD OF COMPETITION.

The complaint has been frequently made during recent years that in many lines of business competition has almost ceased to exist. Understandings and agreements were so common among combinations of business men, that prices of many kinds of goods tended to be uniform. The war period and the two years immediately following it, had a tremendous effect to deaden competition. Manufacturers and wholesalers could sell all the goods they could make, and the tendency was strong to give up the earnest effort to produce the best goods at the lowest prices. Even if they had no understandings with competitors, they might feel so sure of business that they would relax on the constant effort to improve their merchandise. The period of quiet business that succeeded these flush times, has been useful in reminding people that this is a world of competition and effort. There are always more firms doing business than can continue permanently. Life is a made and unmade more men than all struggle and the fittest survive, while the unit and incompatent the nature's combined forces. struggle, and the fittest survive, while the unfit and incompetent have to go to the wall. This is likely to be the permanent condihave to go to the wall. This is likely to be the permanent condition in industry, for war conditions were exceptional and could not last. There is such a thing as destructive competition, where business people cut under each other not so much to get trade and please the public, as in the hopes of ruining the other fellow and driving him out of business. That never pays. But there is a fair and legitimate competition that is in the interest of the public, and which brings good rewards to those who play the game.

A well-known doctor brought a dystoctic farmer a big brown pill. "I want you to try this pill at bedtime." what was Oregon to try this pill at bedtime." White about it as soon as possible. The store keepers pay $8.75 a crate for it in Chicago and have the express to pay also. It retails for 20c a pound. The next day the doctor called again. "Did you manage to retain that pill on your stomach?" he asked eagain. "Did you manage to retain that "Did you manage to retain that "White about it as soon as possible. The store keepers pay $8.75 a crate for it in Chicago and have the express to pay also. It retails for 20c a pound. The heads are in good order. Some pill on your stomach?" he asked eagain. "Well, the pill was all right as long." "Well, the pill was all right as long." "Well, the pill was all right as long." If, and which brings good rewards to those who play the game reasonably. The man who is going to win success in these times has got to show superiority. He must deliver a better article for but every time I fell asleep it fell off." less money or give better service, or in some way offer the public more than others do. Above all, he must let the public know what he is doing through advertising.

Governor Olcott fired a loud salute from the state capitol Sat-Governor Olcott fired a loud salute from the state capitol Saturday. The "working forces" for the two leading candidates for governor—Olcott and Hall—are rarin' to go. The issue is plain enough now. There is no real political motive in the closing days of the present campaign between these two candidates. It has resolved into what can well be termed a "real religious war," the Ku Klux Klan standing pat for Hall, while adherents to the Catholic faith will support Governor Olcott. To those who have Catholic faith will support Governor Olcott. To those who have the best interests of the state in mind this condition does not savor of wholesome results. It is the beginning of a struggle that will upset the entire state, and the real sensible way to dispose of the issue would be to put a man at the head of the state government who is broad enough, fair enough and has the good common sense to give a business administration, eliminating every phase of religious controversy. It is, indeed, a sad plight for this great state to attempt to regulate any person's religious belief through the channels of state government.

An interesting scheme for controlling automobile speeders has recently been devised in St. Louis, by organizing "traffic vigilantes." This body consists of 325 men who have pledged themselves to report violations of the traffic law. Their identity is not known. They have adopted the slogan, "Make St. Louis the safest city in the world to live in." They turn in on an average 600 reports each week of violations, and have reported as many as 2000 in one week. The result has been to keep down accidents and restrain many people who otherwise would be reckless. The vigilantes take the number of offending cars, and report them to the police, and the driver is summoned to appear before the authorities and state what exceuse he can give for his conduct. A system like this is needed in most large places and in some smaller cities to get reckless driving under control.

One of the worst features of a period of quiet business is that so many people lie around idle and make no effort to improve themselves. In the Canton of Geneva in Switzerland, where there has been much unemployment, idle people are required to take practical and technical courses which will help them when they John, it may not all be weight that find work. Mechanics are given courses in carpentering, cabinet counts. making, iron working, etc., so that when they get a job again they will be more likely to make good. In this country many people who were idle last winter should have attended night schools and fitted themselves for more useful service. Unemployment is now $100 a year, by statistics. But who who were idle last winter should have attended night schools and rapidly decreasing as business starts up, but people who have no job ought to be making extensive plans to cultivate gardens or should be doing something to improve their equipment for wage

The trip from Roseburg here was uneventful. Through the Sacramento valley it was warmer than at Roseburg, and everything in the farming line much more advanced than at home. As we came further on our journey the crops were in better shape, grass was green and strong enough for good pasture.
