Flight Around World May Be Attempted by English Aviator Late This Month

By CHARLES A. SMITH (International News Service Staff Correspondent.)

LONDON, May 22.—Plans now are well advanced for another project for compassing the world by air, and it is expected that an amphibian aeroplane soon will rise from the River Thames at Westminster and start on the first stage of its long journey.

The proponent of this new effort is Major W. T. Blake, a well known British aviator and writer of articles on aviation. He intends to pilot the machine himself, and accompanied by Captain Norman Macmillan, hopes to be able to start about the end of May.

"After the tragic death of Sir Ross Smith," said Major Blake, in an interview, "I made inquiries as to the possibilities of carrying out his work."

"A firm of aircraft engine manufacturers has promised me three of their engines, provided that their technical adviser was satisfied as to the machine and the organization. I now am awaiting sanction from the British Air Ministry for the release of a special type of machine."

"I hope to leave England, preferably from the River Thames, opposite the Houses of Parliament, at the end of May, and if all goes well, to return to England in August or September."

Major Macmillan, who is to accompany me in perhaps one of the best known flights in England, and I have every confidence in him.

"It is just possible that a third member may be taken, but on this point no decision has yet been made."

Outline of Route.

"Instead of going from west to east, as proposed by Sir Ross Smith, I intend going in the opposite direction, and the first part of the route to be followed will be via France, Italy, Greece and Crete to Egypt via Baghdad and Basra to Karachi and thence onward across the coast of Burma to Hong Kong."

"At Tokyo the engine probably will be changed and the flight continued via the Siberian coast and the Aleutian Islands to Alaska and thence across Canada and the United States to New York."

"At New York I probably shall ship another new engine, after which the machine will fly to Newfoundland and from there attempt the Atlantic crossing."

"An entirely new route across the Atlantic will be tried. Instead of proceeding direct or via the Azores the course will be set for Greenland and Iceland to Scotland."

"Sir Ross Smith had not decided whether he would fly across the Atlantic direct from Newfoundland or whether he would cross by way of the Azores."

"My route is chosen because the

Love's Masquerade

A Dramatic Story of Love and Romance by Ida M. Gibson

ONE WOMAN'S PHILOSOPHY

"I think, Dr. George," Margaret said, "that this is why love is so agonizingly sweet. We can imagine something so much more beautiful than we can possibly attain. And this is usually the martyrdom of a woman who gives herself up to the worship of one man above all others."

"I think it was in that story of Alice Hammersly, that I read a poem which has always remained in my memory. At the time I read it I was deliciously happy and I said to myself, I am the one exception which proves the rule. I have built me an idol of pure gold, but today I am going to quote it to you and tell you that it is true. All of it, for me as for anyone else."

"Then she repeated this poem, which I copied to read to you. She called it: 'Her Idol.'"

"She crowned him with a laurel wreath And gazed into his eyes beneath To see his soul arise; She laid her trusting head upon his heart And hoped that it might heal the smart Of grief in joy's disguise. She held to him her suppliant hands And said 'thou shalt see before I finish This good within me lies.' Blindly she worshipped and adored And brought to him her whole great hoard Of love that never dies. She never knew his feet were clay Until one sad, heart-breaking day She dropped her eyes, And found a laughing little maid Who all unconscious there had strayed Making mud pies. 'You have known me ever since we were children, George, and I want to tell you that the greatest tragedy in life to a woman is when she finds that her idol's feet are clay.' 'I sometimes wonder if—' 'Ah, yes, dear, Margaret, I interrupted, 'I, too, have sat in the twilight and mused on all the potentialities of that little word 'if.''"

"Please, please," she remonstrated, "as always you have come to my assistance and made me remember the vanity of saying 'if' this had been so" or "if I had done such and such a thing, something very different would have resulted" and my heart would not be aching. The man or woman that allows that word "if" to become a part of his retrospection is paving the way to a misery of the soul and a dulling of the spirit that will surely wreck his life."

"There have been long gaps in our friendship, George," she said, "but I have always known that you

"Two-Gun Justice" Passes From West

By WM. K. HUTCHINSON, (International News Service Staff Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, May 22.—The old order of justice on the far-flung plains of the west is changing.

Hard-riding two-gun plainmen are passing from the picture and in their stead come lean, youthful law enforcement officers riding Pullman cars instead of ponies. The gradual change in the west's famous posses became a matter of history recently when a "Pullman car posse" raided 45 private distilleries in Wyoming to the complete bewilderment of all old-timers.

The posse, headed by State Probation Commissioner Carl Jackson, left Cheyenne, famous old frontier town, late one night in a special Pullman car attached to a transcontinental limited, the car traveling under sealed orders, not even the train crew knowing its destination. Shortly after dawn Director Jackson issued his orders and the car was dropped on a little siding.

Forty deputy marshals, sworn in for the raid, dropped from the car and disappeared in the early dawn. They traveled in squads, each squad having special orders to raid certain suspected "bootleg joints."

The raiders scattered through three frontier towns—Rock Springs, Green River and South Superior.

Prisoners Brought In.

In ten minutes the first prisoners were being brought back to the car headquarters along with samples of confiscated liquor. U. S. Commissioner L. H. Brown held a "drunken court" in the Pullman drawing room. F. D. Striding, division chemist, established an impromptu laboratory at the other end of the car.

Samples of the seized liquors were given to Striding. As quickly as he School Laws in Various States.

Colorado, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Ohio, Oklahoma, North Dakota, West Virginia, Louisiana and Florida do not accept certificates granted by other states. Many of these, however, issue other certificates on the basis of recognized credentials, provided the requirements are met. Connecticut is the only state which issues certificates wholly on the basis of examination, and does not accept credits from institutions either within or without the state.

Preserve Forest Scenic Beauty

Persons who wish to place advertising signs in the national forests of Oregon and Washington must obtain permission from a forest officer, states District Forester Geo. H. Cecil at Portland, Oregon.

The regulations governing the use of national forest lands prohibit the mutilation, defacement or destruction of objects of natural beauty or of scenic value on such lands; and incidentally provide for legal action towards penalties for violation. Only those signs which are of distinct service to the traveling public and which are well constructed and slightly visible are allowed. All persons who have already posted signs on national forest land will be requested either to remove them, or else obtain written permission from a forest officer to continue them.

"The position of the forest service is that the national forests at least should be kept free of objectional advertising signs and only such signs and notices as are actually of assistance to the public should be allowed, and these to be small," said Mr. Cecil.

The indiscriminate placing of advertising signs and billboards along the roads of the country has defaced much of the beauty of the natural landscape, and campaigns against the practice have been waged from time to time in most parts of the United States. The matter is of moment not only to those whose enjoyment of the country-side is lessened, but especially to those in the Northwest whose business is stimulated by numbers of outside tourists who come to this section because of the beauty and attractiveness of the landscape.

The forest service places its own signs, which are always small, within the national forests but the whole idea of these signs is service to the traveling public, or cautionary signs reminding the public to be careful with fire in the forest.

Forest officers in some parts of the Northwest are bothered by irresponsible persons defacing, cutting or tearing down these government signs or notices. This is a violation of a government regulation and can be prosecuted as a trespass, Mr. Cecil pointed out.
