Kathryn Diddel Is Highly Praised

Miss Kathryn Diddel, of Riddle, who is teaching domestic science and art in the Carlton, Oregon, schools, has been the recipient of much praise for her work there this year. Miss Diddel attended Roseburg high school, graduated from O. A. C. and just completed her first year at Carlton.

As a climax to the year of school work Miss Diddel sponsored a fashion show. The following article is from the Carlton paper:

The affair was cleverly planned by the efficient Miss Diddel, a small stage being deftly and artistically decorated to represent a 1922 fashion shop, and to soft music played by Elma Hayes, the young girls of the class displayed their own handiwork, which was really amazing. Dainty polka-dot aprons, chic sport suits and handsome organdie dresses all designed and made by these young school girls, defied criticism and met none. The young models proudest gracefully, some of them showing three and four different costumes, and with each, some article symbolic of the occasion for wearing it, was carried, such as a tennis racquet with a sport suit, etc.

We are indeed proud of our girls and their teacher. The course has had the adverse criticism of a number who did not realize the value of it until they saw what was accomplished.

Miss Diddel has done wonders with the equipment at her disposal, and the state critic, who was here recently, complimented her very highly to Mr. Barnhart, and added that nowhere in the state had she seen the respect shown the teacher and the high class of work as she found in Carlton.

The staging of this exhibit meant hours of patient work, but from the remarks on every side, it was fully appreciated and won over many doubting ones to the cause.

Love's Masquerade

A Dramatic Story of Love and Romance
By Idaho McElone Gibson

FORGETFULNESS OF OTHERS

"You will be perhaps surprised, Dr. George," said Margaret, "to know that the words on the inside of that picture frame were the first in which Harry had really said he loved me."

"What?" interrupted Clavering. "Surely you are mistaken, Milton. Don't you remember that Harry said in his story that he loved her from the first time he saw her. Does she mean to say that he never told her he loved her before that? Surely you are mistaken, Milton."

"Oh, Jim, do you not know that a clever man can say more by saying nothing than a blunderer can ever say with his tongue?" Davis asked.

"Davis is right," agreed Dr. Milton. "If you will just think over what I have been telling you, you will see that Glendening did not say the words of love, even when he sent Margaret's picture. He just let some poet say them for him."

"Well, if you ask me—" "Which we do not," asserted Milton for Clavering's tone was doubtful.

"Well, I'm going to answer nevertheless," insisted Clavering. "I'm going to say that the more I think about it and the more I think about it I am coming to the conclusion that these two very clever literary people were enacting love's masquerade—that neither really knew what love meant."

"If your friend Margaret were as much in love with Glendening as she thought she was, she could not have told it all to you. No person—man or woman—ever tells the innermost thought of his soul to anyone else. Can you not see that both of these people are telling a story by their lives instead of by their pens."

"And if you ask me, I will answer that both Harry and Margaret were more interested in their own psychoanalysis than anything else."

"Yes, I expect it is queer to hear a woman make this complete confession of her inner life and emotion as Margaret has," countered Dr. Milton. "But women have done it. You remember the Journal of Marie Bashkirtseff. Surely she bared her inmost soul. But women of today are even more frank and they are doing many other unexpected things."

To me it seems that they rather glory in those things which, until now, the world has considered better left undone and in saying the things that were better left unsaid.

"From a purely pathological view, the case is most interesting. When Margaret left for Europe the other day she was a very sick woman. I predict that unless she is able to get back to her normal self very soon she will never live to write the book she is contemplating."

"Strange, isn't it, Milt," broke in Davis sarcastically, "that a woman with such a splendid moral nature as you have ascribed to Margaret Earle would have no pity for Harry Glendening's wife and no compunction about receiving love gifts and love-making from Glendening—a married man?"

"Dave, you certainly are not in earnest," interrupted Clavering. "When did a man in love ever think about the other man whose wife he was trying to steal?"

"But we want to think better of our women, Jim."

"Go ahead and think so, if you wish, Dave, but in all history, in all your experience, I am sure you have never found one case where two people were passionately in love that they thought of anything or anybody but themselves."

"Margaret had something to say on this very subject," said Dr. Milton. "When she had finished telling me of the picture in its locked frame she inquired naively: 'Wasn't it strange that all this time I did not think of Harry's wife at all? In all this world there was just Harry and me—the rest of the people were only shadows of dreams.'"

"Honestly, Dr. George, neither Harry nor I ever discussed his wife. Once in a while Harry would mention her in a most casual way as though she were some mutual acquaintance. Once or twice he asked my advice about buying her something. Even that did not seem the least incongruous to me—and I do not think it did to him either. There just wasn't anybody that mattered except ourselves."

"I did not go into the good or bad of it at all. I had no special feeling that I was doing anything wrong—I simply was just happy; that is all."

Advice to Lovelorn and Others

—BY MRS. ELLSBURY—

A Daily Column of Questions and Answers Conducted by a Woman Who Knows. Address Your Letters to Mrs. Ellsbury, Care Roseburg News-Review.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: Do you think it is possible to fall in love with a man without really knowing him? I am really sincere, and not joking, and I want to know what you think about it. There is a man here in town that I really do not know at all. I have talked to him several times but always on business matters that have brought me in contact with him. He has never said anything to me that could be construed by me that he was interested in me, except one day when he called on the phone about a business matter, and made several very pleasant remarks.

Just these few things have caused me to think about him all the time until I am so in love with him I can think of nothing else. And I have not told you the worst of the whole thing yet. He is married, and is living with his wife, happily I suppose. Isn't that a terrible mix-up? Will you tell me what in the world I should do. I have never felt this way before about anyone that I knew and it makes it especially bad when I really don't know him. I could go out with him I think. Would you advise me to, to see whether I really love him or not?

CLARISSA.

Ans. It is possible to become interested in and infatuated with a man that you scarcely know, but real love does not come so easily as that. Make up your mind to forget about the whole thing at once, and you will be surprised to find how easy it is. It is just an interest that you have fostered because you kept thinking about it. In the first place it is wrong because he is married, and if you should go out with him, you know what a married man thinks of a girl that will go out with him. They are not given any real respect.

LOGGER GAINS TWENTY POUNDS AND FEELS FINE

PORTLAND CITIZEN SAYS TAN-LAC OVERCOME STOMACH TROUBLE WHICH HAD HIM IN SUCH BAD FIX HE COULDN'T STAND FOOD AT CAMPS.

"My health got so bad I had to quit the camps but in one month Tanlac has helped me to gain twenty pounds and I am going back to work at once," said Arthur Svensen, 52 1/2 N. First St., Portland, Ore., well-known logger.

"My stomach and kidneys were so badly out of order that the food we got in the logging camps didn't agree with me. It looked like every bite I ate soured and I would bloat up with gas till I felt like I would smother. I lost my appetite and went down in weight and strength. My back got so lame and hurt so bad that finally I came down to Portland in the spring to try to get relief before it was too late."

"I decided to try Tanlac and it fit my case exactly. I have taken three bottles now and simply feel like I have been made all over again. I think so much of Tanlac I am going to carry a supply of it out to the camps with me."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists.
