

A Combination You Can't Beat.

The McCormick - Deering Line and "Your" Farm

You must not at any time be misled, that our credit system, service, and the stock of implements we carry for your inspection and comparison at all time cost you a cent. We handle no off-the-market brand of farm machinery, but IMPLEMENTS.

That can not be duplicated, or the International Harvester Company would offer them to you through us. For every dollar spent here, your dollar does its one hundred penny value—that's all—nothing else. What more can be offered you anywhere else at any time than 100 per cent value?

Love's Masquerade

A Dramatic Story of Love and Romance by Ida McElone Gibson

MRS. GLENDENING'S CALL

"You have so many unique things in your room. That cabinet of odd pieces of old glass set in that window is simply marvelous," said Mrs. Annaler as she wandered about my studio apartment.

"I'm glad you like it," I remarked conventionally and strangely enough I hardly recognized my own voice. Just at that moment Sally brought in the tea and Doris Glendenning seated herself in that old blue velvet chair in which Harry always sat when he was in my home.

"Isn't Fate a Joker, Dr. George?" All inside of me I was laughing and yet little cold fingers of terror were clutching my heart. For the first time it didn't seem just right to me—this love of Harry's and mine. For a moment I almost wanted to scream for she settled down in the chair and leaned back against the place where his head had pressed so often.

"I almost felt as though she must catch the ghostly idea of his presence. Oh, Dr. George, if sometimes we could look into the minds and souls of those who chatter with us daily!"

"Today this came to me with greater force than ever. Here was Doris Glendenning telling me what she considered news about her husband and Harry had told it all to me over the telephone long before."

"Harry," she said, "insisted upon going to his home and looking over some old household traps we had left there. I had never intended to reclaim them. I hate old things. I like of them and so I told him it would be much better to tell his mother to burn them. It would save all the money that he would spend on his trip."

"But, Mrs. Earle, Harry can be very stubborn and obstinate upon occasion. Usually I just tire out his objection, but this time I didn't seem able to do it. He seemed to have some reason for going home that he would not tell me. Some special purpose which I could not get out of him."

"While Mrs. Glendenning had been rattling on, I was conscious that her friend had been studying me and my apartment with a curiously appraising eye. I could not help thinking that she was rather sizing me up as one of Harry's special friends. Perhaps that was my guilty conscience."

"She came forward to put her cup down on the table."

"What a curious and intriguing bit of bric-a-brac," she exclaimed as she picked up the locked picture frame—Harry's gift. For a moment my heart beat wildly. "Is it permissible to ask, Mrs. Earle, if you keep within it the leaves of your secret orisons?" She smiled as she spoke—a curious, penetrating look upon her face.

"Doris Glendenning turned and took the frame to her hands. 'How charming. Did you get it abroad?' It is a picture frame."

"I did not get it abroad, and it is a picture frame, Mrs. Glendenning. I am sure, Mrs. Annaler, that it will interest and intrigue you more, if I tell you that what is within must remain forever locked from all eyes but mine."

"Forgive me, Mrs. Earle," said Alma Annaler. "I did not mean to pry into anything that you do not wish me to know. But the idea is such a strange one that I felt it must have more than an ordinary sentimental value attached to it."

"Mrs. Glendenning seemed to have lost all interest in the frame and I was thankful."

"May I powder my nose?" she asked suddenly.

"Surely. Come into my bedroom," I said leading the way.

"Doris Glendenning seated herself in front of my dressing table and as she did so my eyes for one horrified instant spied those little lingerie pins that Harry had given me. I did not have time to realize that she could not possibly identify them with Harry before her eyes found them as well, and she picked one of them up and looked at it closely and then began to laugh."

"My heart felt as though it was freezing. 'Oh, Alma,' she called. 'Come here. I want you to see another one of Mrs. Earle's original ideas.'"

"Why, isn't it a darling lingerie pin?" remarked Mrs. Annaler, as though there was nothing unique about it at all.

"Yes, but read the inscription—"

"Inconvenientest," Mrs. Annaler read with a puzzled frown and looked to me for some explanation.

"Inconvenientest," Why how dumb you are, Alma," exclaimed Mrs. Glendenning. "Surely you realize there is nothing that belongs to a woman's toilet more inconvenient than those foolish little clasps. They are hard to put on and almost impossible to take off."

"Harry has always told me, Mrs. Earle, how original you are in all your ideas. I must tell him about these little clasps. It will amuse him."

"I could not speak, but raising my eyes I caught a queer expression on the face of Alma Annaler."

"How much does she know about Harry?" I asked myself, "and how much does she suspect about me?"

BOBBED-HAIRED GIRLS WILL BUY BACK LOCKS IS EXPERT PREDICTION

(International News Service). DEFIANCE, O., May 8.—Bobbed-haired American girls will be buying their hair back soon at huge prices. Of course, it may not be their own hair, but in that case, some other fair one will be paying a good sum for the tresses which young lady No. 1 so gladly relinquished not long since.

In other words, the bobbed hair craze is merely the result of some clever promotion on the part of the beauty shops which have found little profit in their profession, except through the sale of the elaborate coiffure.

That's the report of one habitue of the beauty shops in many large cities who thought it safe to divulge the information in Defiance, Ohio, in the belief it "wouldn't get out." According to this informant, the beauty shop proprietors have given her the following story:

"Receipts began to twindle when the 'rat' and the 'switch' and the 'transformation' went out of style. So, to put matters on a bed-rock foundation (no reference to the head intended), the bobbed-hair fad was pushed energetically. Everyone entering a beauty shop was given a comprehensive argument on the desirability of short hair. That campaign is now at its height."

"And, in anticipation of the reaction, there now are appearing the most elaborate combs and transformations. How can they be worn? Only with an elaborate coiffure."

"During the coming summer the fall fashions will emphasize hair and more hair. And when the formal social season opens in late September watch the rush for the beauty shops. And watch the artful milters of feminine attractiveness well back to their artless sisters their very own tresses at a commanding figure."

Roseburg Hit by Heavy Rain Storm

One of the heaviest rain storms to strike Roseburg in many years occurred yesterday afternoon between 3:35 and 4:05. During the thirty minutes exactly .52 inches of rain fell, an unusual occurrence for this part of the country. The storm began with practically no warning and although electrical in nature no claps of thunder were heard until the storm had almost abated. The rain began to fall very briskly at exactly 3:35 according to the records of the U. S. weather bureau. For a half hour the rain fell in torrents, filling the streets with water, running over the curbs and in some places flowing over the sidewalk and into the store building. During the duration of the storm, the barometer rose quite rapidly. Mr. Bell immediately reported the storm to Washington, where it was used in making up the weather predictions.
