The decisiveness of Tooze's election elated his followers, and came after a period of oratory.

DILLARD WINS GAME.

In a fast and snappy game of ball played at Oakland yesterday afternoon, the Dillard nine defeated the Oakland aggregation by a score of 11 to 8. ## Love's Masquerade

A Dramatic Story of Love and Romance By Idaho McElone Gibson

THE AFTERMATH

While Davis was still in his room dressing, the phone tinkled and Clavering asked:

"How soon will you be down, Dave?"

"Immediately, How's Glendening?"

"Still unconscious. I'm going to take a cold shower to buck me up after the cares of this busy night, and then I shall breakfast in my room. Join me here in a half-hour if you have not already eaten."

"I'll be right up. Did you hear from Milt?"

"Yes. I phoned the hospital and was told, 'Dr. Milton is resting quietly. He was not burned so badly as at first thought. He will probably be able to be moved from the hospital in a week or two.'"

"Good! I'm glad of that, Jim."

"I'll tell you the rest when you come to my room."

"I'll be there promptly as I have an early engagement with Doris Glendening."

Both men showed the signs of a sleepless, exciting night when they met in Clavering's room.

By this time the first editions of the afternoon papers were out, and they scanned them eagerly.

However, they added nothing much to what the men already knew.

The "American Beauty" was dead.

Her body has been taken to Merton's undertaking parlors after the inquest where a coroner's jury returned an indictment against her husband.

He was remanded to jail, charged with the murder of his wife and the shooting of Harry Glendening with intent to kill.

"I feel rather sorry for Adams," said Davis after Clavering told him he had seen one of the reporters who had been at the jail to interview him.

He seems quite a decent sort of a fellow from what the newspaper man said."

"He told me," continued Clavering, "that Adams was on the verge of madness at the moment. Said he was moaning and calling all the time to Claire to come back and forgive him, for he had not intended to kill her—he had only tried to get Glendening."

"The reporters says Adams is still vindictive against Glendening. Seems to be quite miserable because he did not kill him. He told the reporter many times that he hopes Glendening would die. Said he would probably have to go to the chair for killing Claire anyway and he would feel better if he knew that he had put Glendening out of the way."

"During the night he tried to commit suicide by opening a vein in his wrist with a small pen-knife that had been overlooked when he was searched."

"It promises to be a very sensational trial," remarked Clavering with a sigh, "and I really wish I was not in it, although of course I would have to be Harry's lawyer under any circumstances. We have been friends too long for me to desert him at a time like this."

"What do you think Mrs. Glendening will do, Dave?"

"Haven't the slightest idea, but if I know her at all, I am of the opinion she will not rest her head as soon as possible and leave town. She will have all this notoriety."

"No, she won't, Dave. She'll stick to him. See if she doesn't. That's a woman's way—more honor to them. Although I am an old bachelor, I know women well enough to know that she will do that."

"Women are queer creatures. Most of them have an over-abundance of pity, and it's a good thing for us, Dave, that they have, for as nearly as I can make out, most of us stand in need of some woman's pity and forgiveness a large part of the time."

"Well, that letter from Doris Glendening that I was to read to you and which will probably rest unread for a while, even if you never hear it, as you know I am to call upon her now, and, of course, my future action will depend upon what she wishes done."

"What did you hear of Mrs. Milton?" asked Davis, as he turned at the door.

"The woman found near Milt has been identified as that of his wife. Her body has also been sent to Merton's undertaking establishment."

"Strange, isn't it, Jim?" commented Davis thoughtfully as he walked back into the room, "that all that was mortal of these two women should be lying side by side in the same place. Neither knew the other existed. And yet, through another woman who was probably personally unknown to either of them, they were both brought on the stage by fate to play their part in this drama of life."

"Margaret Earle, Claire Adams, Mary Milton and Doris Glendening, were four women whose lives never touched, and yet not one of the stories of these women would be complete without the stories of the others."

Tomorrow—D. Milton's story.

Postal Employees Held Banquet

The banquet given as a part of the Postal Clerks' and Carriers' convention Saturday evening was a very enjoyable event. Postal employees from all over the state were present, and they invited as their guests a large number of local citizens. Rev. C. H. Hilton, pastor of the Christian church, served as toastmaster, and Councilman J. E. McClintock appeared for Mayor Hamilton, who was ill and unable to attend, and welcomed the visitors to the city. Several other local speakers were called upon, and the officials of the postal organizations made very interesting addresses.

Paneling in the Majestic Lounge

One of the most beautiful features of the Majestic, the world's largest ship, is the oak paneling and carving in her largest public room, the Lounge. It is considered one of the finest examples of woodwork extant. The paneling extends from the floor to the ceiling, which is 25 feet high. The grill work of hand-wrought iron, over plate glass, at the entrance of the Lounge, is also impressive for its fine design and workmanship.

Lineman Killed in 40-Foot Fall

MEDFORD, June 24.—Grover Darnelle, 35 years of age, and one of the oldest linemen for the California-Oregon Power company, from a standpoint of service, was killed instantly this morning at 8:10 o'clock when he fell 40 feet from a pole at the corner of North Central and Jackson streets. Work on the new pole was just completed, all the lines having been fastened to the insulators and Darnelle had just unclipped his safety belt preparatory to coming down the pole. He had hold of the pole with one hand and was about to attach the loose end of the safety belt to his belt. In order to do this it was necessary to change the hold on the pole from one hand to the other. Just before changing his grip his hand slipped and his climber held fast. He was leaning from the pole and as his feet were held in a stationary position by the climber he fell head first, his feet remaining stationary until his head had reached a lower level and had pulled the spikes of the climber from their seat in the wooden pole.

Killed Instantly.

He struck the cement sidewalk on Central Ave., 40 feet below, head first and was killed instantly. The fellow workers on Frank Stinson's crew rushed to his aid, but nothing could be done. One man was coming down the pole at the time of the fall and Darnelle fell past him while another of his fellow workers was close to the base of the pole and took several quick steps in an effort to catch him before he struck the ground.

A brace used for boring holes for bolts was lying on the sidewalk and was hit squarely by the back of Darnelle's head. The wooden handle, which one grasps in order to turn the brace, was smashed completely by the impact.

AGNES AYRES CHARMING IN A NEW PICTURE

Agnes Ayres proved herself a capable star in her stellar Paramount vehicle, "The Lane That Had No Turning," which was displayed with great success at the Antlers theater last night. The scenes of the story are laid in Canada, and the heroine is a young bride who sacrifices her career as a singer to remain with her husband who is suddenly deformed. There is an abundance of thrills in the development of this story by Sir Gilbert Parker. Miss Ayres was artistic in her portrayal of an exacting role, while Theodore Kosloff, Mahlon Hamilton and Frank Campeau rendered efficient support. It will be shown for the last time tonight.
