

COLONIAL PIPELESS FURNACE

Many homes in Roseburg are being heated by this Oregon-made furnace, and every user is a booster. Burns coal or wood. Takes 24-inch wood, which fits oblong fire box, covers the complete grate, and will not hang up in fire pot, which means cheaper fuel and less trips to the basement to attend furnace. Will burn wood more economically with less attention and more satisfaction to user than any round fire pot made. We locate, install and guarantee these furnaces. Let us look at your house and give you an estimate. We can install pipeless furnaces in houses where arrangement makes a pipeless one impractical. Two substantial reductions since Feb. 1st.

Love's Masquerade

A Dramatic Story of Love and Romance
By Idaho McGillicuddy Gibson

THE UNREDEEMABLE

"Harry, you mustn't talk," said Clavering. "You are getting excited. Don't you know that it is foolish to think about things that are over and done with forever?"

"That's just it, Jim—that's just it. I want another chance. I want another chance with Margaret."

"And what about Doris?" asked Clavering, hardening.

"Oh she told me that she would forgive me and I took her at her word, Jim. She told me very decidedly that she could never forgive me, although she was trying hard to forget."

"And then, with Margaret on the other side of the world, and Doris implacable you know what happened. I expect the thing for me to have done under the circumstances was to have covered up that yellow streak I am beginning to think is in me and to have gone back to my work and settle down to the hum-drum, everyday grind. But, being what I am, Jim, thoroughly human, I just had a great wave of self-pity. I just felt that I was really getting a little more than I deserved."

"Of course my thoughts flew to the woman who has been flattered by me. I knew what Claire would say. I decided to let the world go hang—and—and—well, the whole world knows the rest."

"You have read that paragraph in the newspaper, Jim. You know very well that Margaret did not intend to come home. Something has changed her mind. Is it such a far conclusion that she might not have seen at least a short account of my trouble and is hurrying home to me?"

"Doris wants to come to me, and honestly, I have never thought that Doris loved me as much as Margaret does."

"Oh, I know it's not that I deserve it, but when I read that paragraph today, for the first time I had a feeling that maybe fate did not intend to throw me wounded and bruised upon the ash heap that the birds of scandal might pick out my eyes."

"When I read that paragraph today, Jim, for the first time since I came to myself I really had a desire to live."

"I presume I have never had that vivid sense of right as to my own conduct that would make me exchange impulses for principle. The thing I have wanted to do always seemed to me to be the thing to do. I never had any controversy with my conscience over it. In fact, I have almost thought that thing which other people call 'conscience' was a myth."

"I know I am wrong now, Jim, for conscience is making itself heard to the exclusion of every other thought in my mind. I wish I had heeded its still, small voice before. I have wished often that I could be like other people. Other people, Jim, do what they do not like to do, because they know it is the right thing to do—and because it is the right thing to do, they like to do it. You see, it works both ways."

"Oh, you are getting well, Harry," smiled Clavering. "I have sometimes thought that you enjoyed more juggling words than making love to a pretty woman—and that's some juggling, you know."

"I guess that's what I am—a juggler; that's all I am," said Clavering wearily. "I seem to have juggled with everything and everybody all ways; and most of all I have juggled with love and life. And now I have not been able to keep love in the air—it has fallen to the ground and is shattered. Even life is wobbling. I am not sure it will not be too hard for me to keep it going any longer. Still, I've got to keep it going a little longer at least, and that's the tragedy of it all—the juggler wants to stop juggling and be content."

"I tell you, Jim, that it is only after I have seen Margaret again that I shall know whether I want to stop or not. I know now that I have never loved any other woman. I know that I shall be utterly unbearable without her; I know I shall not try to live if she turns me down."

"Oh, Harry, why do you continue to try to be a greater fool than God made you?" asked Clavering impatiently. "Here you have a chance to make it all up with Doris. Here you have a chance to grow up and be a man. Here you have a chance to be a decent citizen, and it is very probable that Doris will be very glad to have children if you go back to her. Yet here you go, ready to play the same right over again in the selfsame way that you have been doing all your life, when there are 99 chances to one that you will lose."

"Clavering got up and started impatiently toward the door. He was worn out and tired of Harry's irresponsibility."

"Here, Jim, please don't go—don't leave me. Surely you know that I don't like myself any better than you like me. Surely you must know that I wake up in the night and hate myself, and then I go to sleep and dream that some roguish eye is looking at me, and some smiling mouth is intriguing—and sleeping, waking, I know that I will follow."

"Oh, there have been moments since I have been lying here when I loathed myself to a degree almost impossible to endure. That loathing was greatest when I found that Margaret was coming back, but as I read that paragraph over and over again I had an exaltation of spirits that I always had in her presence."

"I'm just lying here waiting now," Tomorrow—Glendening, the impossible.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

BY MRS. ELLSBURY

A Daily Column of Questions and Answers Conducted by a Woman Who Knows. Address your Letters to Mrs. Ellsbury Care Roseburg News-Review

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I am engaged to a man and we were to be married in June, but he had to put it off because he was sick. He is not serious in ill but has so many sick spells that it leaves him weak and not able to do very much. He has quite a bit of money saved, and is making good wages when he can work. I have been wondering whether I am justified in waiting for him or not. I am all ready to get married, but my clothes and everything, but as long as he is in this ill we cannot be married. What would you advise me to do? If I broke with him, how should I tell him?

Ans. If you broke with him now you would be doing a very selfish thing. If you were ill when the time came for you to be married, and the wedding had to be postponed, would you expect him to break with you on that account?

Help him to get well, and cheer and encourage him by letting him know that you want him to recover and will help him in any way possible. That is the best medicine. You would be a very poor sport if you did not do this. Remember that when you marry him the wedding service says "in sickness and in health."

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I have just refurnished and refurnished my living room. I have always wanted one finished in a soft shade of old blue, and I realized my dream this time. The davenport and chairs and portiers are all in this beautiful shade of old blue. The cover for the table is black velvet, and there are black velvet cushions. It is very beautiful but some way or other it lacks something, and I think it is a touch of color. It is casual and pleasing to the eye, but there is a sort of dead look to it, and I wonder if something to contrast with it would not brighten it up and still not destroy the harmony. Am I right?

Ans. Yes, I think you are right. Add black and orange velvet cushions to your davenport, and put several fat orange velvet cushions around the room, and the result will be entirely different. Just the other day I saw in a local store some very beautiful orange bud vases and candle stick holders. The color was very vivid, and would be beautiful in your room, providing the cushions matched them in color. If you had these just one or two cushions would be enough. Too much color will destroy your harmony.

Looking Glass Resident Dies

Charles B. Arnold, who for the last 24 years has been a loved and respected resident of Looking Glass, died at his home on Tuesday, July 11. Mr. Arnold was born in Washington county, Michigan, on November 3, 1853. He later moved to Shawanaw county, Michigan, where he purchased a ranch and lived for thirty years. In 1888 he came to Oregon and purchased a farm in Looking Glass valley.

Mr. Arnold is survived by his widow, two sons and one daughter; R. C. Arnold, of Looking Glass, and Homer Arnold, and Mrs. Mattie Shields, of Portland; one step-daughter, Miss Alice Bostick, of Looking Glass; six grandchildren, and one great-granddaughter, Mrs. Nelson Andrews, who is now living in British Columbia.

Funeral services were held at Looking Glass on Thursday at 2 p. m. The little church altar was flanked with beautiful floral offerings. The Rev. Mr. Rhoads, now pastor of the Looking Glass church, officiated and paid a beautiful tribute to the memory of Mr. Arnold. Interment followed in the Looking Glass cemetery.

Being a man quiet and reserved in his manner, Mr. Arnold greatly endeared himself to the community to which he has resided for so many years. For nearly three years he has been confined to his home, a patient sufferer. Numerous messages of sympathy are being extended to the bereaved family.

One came to Mrs. Hall, another for himself, and no, guess again. There is no little Hall. The third came to Mrs. Hall's Boston building.

Mrs. Hall's ice cream as though it was the finest thing in the world. He also often ate the next best thing along that line—iceballs—through the generosity of youthful owners of ice ball stands who like to see the dog eat them.

Men Wanted

For service as railroad machinists, boilermakers, blacksmiths, electricians, sheet metal workers, pipe fitters, coppermiths, tinners, car inspectors, car repairers, helpers—all classes under strike conditions best explained by Chairman Ben W. Hooper of the United States Railroad Board, in his statement of July 1st reading as follows: "In this case the conflict is not between the employer and the oppressed employees. The people of this country, through an act of congress, signed by President Wilson, established a tribunal to decide such disputes over wages and working conditions which are submitted to it in a proper manner. It is the decision of this tribunal against which the shop crafts are striking. Regardless of any question of the right of the men to strike the men who take the strikers' places are merely accepting the wages and working conditions prescribed by a government tribunal and are performing a public service. They are not accepting the wages and working conditions which an employer is trying to impose. For this reason, public sentiment and full government power will protect the men who remain in their position and see men who may come in."

Adequate provisions have been made for the full protection of all new employees, the same as old employees who have remained loyally at work.

Applicants should apply to the office of the superintendent at Portland (Union Station), or to the assistant superintendent at Roseburg.
