Blind Bachelor Spends Life Making Musical Instruments with Penknife

Thomas Doolittle Brings Cheer to Thousands in West Virginia.

BLIND—

FAIRMONT, W. Va., July 12.—Although blind for more than 28 years, Thomas Doolittle has made in that time more than two hundred musical instruments ranging from violins to a creation of his own which he has named the "violin-mandolin."

Doolittle lost his sight when but 19 years of age through a scrofulous infection. Dependent as a consequence of the loss of his sight, he tried to forget his misfortune through absorption in his violin, an instrument which he already played well.

In course of time Thomas became an expert violinist, and in order to capitalize his ability he decided to tour the rural districts giving one and two night concerts in country schoolhouses and churches.

This idea proved very popular in the rural communities, where good music was not heard often. Doolittle continued these concerts for many years. In this time he played in nearly every county in the state of West Virginia, following a regular circuit. In giving these concerts he acquired a reputation as a musician that has withstood the years.

Doolittle was a carpenter, and he still kept trying to "make things" with soft wood and a penknife. He found this interesting, and it was not long until he attempted work that required other tools.

As Doolittle became more and more interested in this work he again saw possibilities ahead and decided to try really difficult work. One of the first sincere efforts he made to accomplish something worth while was put into the making of a hope-chest. The result was highly satisfactory. The chest came soon afterward a dresser, piano bench, chiffonier and library table. All these were well done, but his interest was not in that class of work and he accordingly turned to the manufacture of musical instruments.

His first attempt in this line was a violin; not such a good one, but it would play. The second was better, as was each succeeding one. In all Doolittle has made 161 violins, 58 guitars, 28 mandolins, one ukulele, seven bass viols, five dulcimers and three violin-mandolins.

The ninety-seventh and last violin he has ever made. This violin is one of exceptional tone, and it has been said by experts that the violins are far beyond the range of all ordinary violins. All his later instruments are noted for the sweet, mellow tones which their maker brought out.

Quite Instrument Making.

Doolittle has not made any instruments for several months and declares that he may never make another one. He is more content now to remain at home with his two sisters, with whom he lives, and potter around in his little shop on odd jobs brought him by friends and neighbors. A great deal of his time is also taken up by repair work. Musical instruments from all over the state are sent to him for repair, and he makes them as good as new.

Loss of sight has only served to increase the kindness of this man and, if possible, make him more appreciative of the more beautiful things in life. He has a kindly, humorous spirit that endears him at once to new friends and old.

Never married, Doolittle gives his affections to his beloved instruments and to the two sweet little old ladies, his sisters, who care for him. Possibly this is because he, in his many years before the public, sent his music deep into so many hearts and he left it there a softening, mellowing influence and the echo is now repeating itself in his own life, softer, sweeter, grander than before.

BERTILLON SYSTEM APPLIED TO THE NOSES OF COWS

(International News Service.) LOS ANGELES, Cal., July 13.—The Moo-cow-moo has a tail like a rope, and it's raveled down where it grows; And it's just like feeding a piece of soap All over the end of the moo-cow's nose. —JAMES WHITCOMB HILEY.

Quick, Watson, the Needle!

And now comes a new method—a certain method—or identifying the neighbor's cow that ate up the turnips in the vegetable patch.

Dr. E. M. Keefe, veterinarian in charge of the local office of the State Department of Agriculture, declares that science has discovered a real "bertillon system" of identifying bovines—by their nose prints.

And before very long dairymen, or anyone else who keeps a cow, will probably be forced by law to photograph the animal and then keep an ink imprint of the slippery end of the cow's face on the back of the picture for purposes of full identification.

A cow's noseprint is just as certain an identification as the fingerprint of a human being. Dr. Keefe says, and furthermore, there are two noses alike in the entire bovine family. The discovery of this fact by Dr. Keefe, who is said to be formerly of the University of Minnesota, will prove of great value in preventing the falsification of records showing the animal's heritage.

It also will prevent any fraud in milk production as well. It is claimed, as the nose-prints of each will be checked on the page of the dairymen's ledger bearing the Bertillon

Identification.

The question confronting veterinarians now is just how readily will Mrs. Cow take to having her nose-prints registered. Interviewed on the subject, one Jersey cow chewed her cud reflectively for a moment and then softly said "moo-o-o." All of which means in the bovine tongue, "I should worry."

The question has now arisen in scientific circles that if science had known this method of identification 50 years ago, could it have been proven that after all, it was not Mrs. O'Leary's cow that was responsible for the great Chicago fire.

Who knows? Nobody but the cow's nose!

UPMEN ARE ASSAULTED BY AUTO RAIDERS

WELLS, Cal., July 13.—Sixty "indian" workers brought from the state and started to work in the San Pacific railroad shops here today, early today were dragged out of their beds in a sleeping car by automobile raiders estimated to be from 50 to 75, and beaten. One man, Roadmaster Tom, was so badly beaten by the raiders that the outcome of his injuries raiders, who arrived in Orville and said to have numbered 200, dispersed the suddenly downed strikers, who fled in confusion, after which the attackers descended in force on the house, where the guards were. One report says 200 shots exchanged between the guards and raiders, but early today no report of bullet injuries had been received.

The roundhouse, attackers found darkness caused by the shooting of the lights and windows. Were used freely and the guards many shots at their assailants, finally they were overcome and taken. Early reports that four were missing and were being held in a kidnapped could be confirmed.

Johnson, the injured road master, is in a small cabin near the house and beaten over the head. He afterwards was taken to Orville hospital.

Mr. Andrews, master mechanic of the Western Pacific shops at Sacramento, who has been in charge here since the strike, appeared to be the object of the hate raiders. He was in the roundhouse with the guards and was himself at the point of a party would have been a com-

CLERK REFUSES ACCEPT RECALL PETITION

MEDFORD, July 13.—Chauncy Florey, county clerk, today refused to accept the petitions filed Wednesday, nominating D. M. Lowe, farmer and fair exhibit collector, as a recall candidate against Sheriff C. E. Terrill, on the grounds "that they do not in any particular comply with the law, being more of a recommendation than a nomination. The petitions are still in my office, but I will not consider them," said the county clerk, "that the nomination should be filed with the recall, and I am now looking up the legal end of this question. As it stands now we have a recall, but no candidate. The law provides that a candidate run at a recall election, so the vacancy can be filled."

The papers in behalf of Lowe were filed by Jack Schneider, a detective of Ashland, who now runs, or did run an agency known as the "Southern Oregon Identification Bureau." He is a finger print expert, and assisted the sheriff's office in collecting evidence in the first Lark Evans' trial. He was accompanied by George Iverson, a local carpenter.

The threatened injunction against the county clerk to enjoin him from taking any steps towards holding the special election July 29th did not materialize, being still in course of construction. The application will be based principally upon the lack of specific charges against the sheriff.

The county clerk said the report had gained circulation that he had sent out circulars and cards urging voters
