COLONIAL PIPELESS FURNACE

Many homes in Roseburg are being heated by this Oregon-made furnace, and every user is a booster. Burns coal or wood. Takes 24-inch wood, which fits oblong fire box, covers the complete grate, and will not hang up in fire pot, which means cheaper fuel and less trips to the basement to attend furnace. Will burn wood more economically with less attention and more satisfaction to user than any round fire pot made. We locate, install and guarantee these furnaces. Let us look at your house and give you an estimate. We can install pipe furnaces in houses where arrangement makes a pipeless one impractical. Two substantial reductions since Feb. 1st.

Pear Crop to Be Short Growers Say

SALEM, July 21.—Three thousand five hundred tons—or 7,000,000 pounds—of pears will be handled by Salem packers this season, local authorities estimated today. This year's pack will show an increase of about 500 tons over the amount handled last year.

Only about 1200 tons of this year's pack will be grown in the vicinity of Salem, it was explained. The remainder will be shipped here from southern Oregon and Washington. Even with the prospective increase in tonnage, the crop will be far short, growers said.

Despite the fact that prices for the growers may be somewhat less this year, the community may receive a larger return this season than last due to the increased yield. In 1921 the growers received about $60 a ton, while this year they will, in all probability, be paid prices ranging from $50 to $55, it was said.

Although more pears will be taken from the trees this year than last, the crop will yet be short of normal. This is due to the fact that cold weather was experienced during the blooming season.

About 250 tons of pears will be grown on the Wallace farm alone. This orchard of 50 acres yielded only about 160 last year.

Coles Valley Saw Mill Changes Hands

A deal involving the sawmill and timber on what is known as the old Vinson place in Coles Valley, but of late years owned by Joelson Brothers, was closed yesterday, the Keith Lumber company becoming owners of the property. The new firm is composed of E. K. and A. A. Keith and C. M. Falk, formerly of Portland, all of them experienced sawmill men. They have taken charge of the mill, and contemplate enlarging the plant and doing a larger volume of business. In addition to a large amount of fir timber, there is a lot of merchantable oak on the tract, and the new management will look after this part of the business.

The Salvation Army would appreciate your coat off clothing. Phone 379-R. Will call immediately. Mrs. Redifer in charge.

STRIKEBREAKER ON STRIKE AT LA GRANDE

LA GRANDE, July 20.—Because the O. W. R. & N. is said to be profiteering off the strikebreakers, one man quit Wednesday and reported prices charged in the storeroom to headquarters. Canvas gloves worth 10 cents are sold for 50 cents, he said. Board costs them $9 a week and overalls, of a quality selling for less than $2 in local stores, cost the strikebreakers and those loyal to the railroad and refusing to strike, $2.50.

Trains are running behind time to a greater extent than any time since the beginning of the strike. This is due to the fact that the condition of the equipment and to the fact that the helper engines in the Blue mountains have been brought to La Grande following the walkout of the fire knockers with the stationary firemen Monday.

OBITUARY

Mrs. Christina Feld-Goodnow was born in Germany January 6, 1851. She came to the United States with her parents in 1860, living during her childhood days in Quincy, Illinois. During the Civil war she rolled bandages and scarping lint for the wounded soldiers. In July, 1870, she married O. S. Goodnow, who took her to the southern states to live. Four children came to bless their home. One daughter died in infancy. Shortly after, Mrs. Goodnow's health failed, and she was ordered west, first living in Seattle, Washington, and 22 years ago came to Grants Pass. During the Spanish American war she did Red Cross work, and during the World war she was just as active.

Mrs. Goodnow was a member of the Episcopal church, a real Christian, in the fraternal world she was well-known and much-beloved. She was a member of the W. R. C. the Rebekah lodge, Lady Militant, Order of Eastern Star, and Ladies of the G. A. R. circle. Although not born in the United States, there was no more loyal citizen, and she loved the flag so well that she expressed a wish that when she passed away she be given the flag service of an American citizen, and the flag be buried with her. The W. R. C. held the service at Hall's chapel at 10:30 Saturday morning. The Rebekah service was held later at the Granite Hill cemetery.

Mrs. Goodnow was known for her many kind deeds, always thoughtful as a neighbor and friend. She leaves to mourn her loss her husband, O. S. Goodnow; a daughter, Mrs. Mabel Walrath, of Sacramento, California, and two sons, John O., of Portland, Oregon, and Oliver C., of Sacramento, California; also four grandsons.

Mrs. Goodnow lived in Roseburg and followed dress making. She will be remembered as an active worker in Reno Corp No. 13, and was elected as president of Reno corp, but moved to Grants Pass to reside. She was a true friend to every one.

Love's Masquerade

A Dramatic Story of Love and Romance by Leah McElone Gibson

TWO UNSIGNED TELEGRAMS

Davis turned the car toward the Glendening apartment. Although Clavering thought Doris would rather have ridden further and talked more, Davis gave her no chance.

"Sorry, Doris," he remarked as he stopped at the curb, "but Clavering and I have a very important business engagement. I'll phone you if anything develops."

Doris accepted the situation gracefully for her as she could see Davis' mind was set upon something. As the two men drove off, Davis turned to Clavering and asked: "Well, what has happened? Has anything been decided?"

"Not a thing but this," returned Clavering, drawing the copies of the two telegrams to Margaret Earle from his pocket.

"Do you mean to tell me, Jim, that you sent both those wires to Margaret Earle this afternoon?" demanded Davis.

"Within 15 minutes of each other."

"Do you realize that they both are unsigned?"

"Yes. Each man was sure that his was the only telegram to Margaret and that she would know exactly who sent it."

"Do you suppose she will know which sent which?"

Jim Clavering read the telegrams again.

"Am only living in hopes of seeing you. Let no garbled accounts of recent episode influence you. With all my soul I implore you to come immediately and get the whole truth from me."

The other one read: "The hope of seeing you soon makes my pain bearable. Will you not come to me, Margaret, before another operation that I am almost sure is inevitable. At last I want to tell you the whole thing."

The two men looked at each other for a moment in consternation. Then Clavering broke into a laugh and Davis followed.

"Do you suppose that Margaret will be able to make head or tail of this? As a secretary I do not think you are much of a success, Jim."

"Well, Dave, could I say to either of those men: 'Aren't you going to sign this?'"

"No, but you might have said: 'What shall I sign it?' or something like that."

"I couldn't do it, Dave. It would look so stupid. Each one was so sure Margaret would understand. Perhaps I had better send her another wire telling her which is which."

"Don't be foolish. She doesn't know that you had anything to do with those messages. I can see very plainly that Fate is playing this game from now on and sometimes I think it would have been better if we had not tried to interfere in the first place. The wills of the gods have kept on grinding in spite of all our efforts."

"Granted, but neither you nor I can tell which man will be ground 'exceeding small.' I expect that can only be determined by the lady in the case."

"Then there is only one lady, huh? Who does Doris Glendening come in?"

"Well, I should say that it is Harry who is to be ground, Doris will turn the mill-wheel."

"We know one thing at least if Margaret Earle is in love with either man she will be able to sign his telegram with his own name."

"Perhaps you are right, Dave," and, as though in confirmation of Davis' prediction when the men arrived at the club Clavering found a call for him from Margaret.

"Dave," said Clavering with a grin, "I'll wager you that she asks me which telegram is which."

"Name your stakes. She is going to tell you that she is going to come over and see one of them," rejoined Davis, confidently.

"Which one?"

"I pass. She'll tell you."

"Then I had better amble along to the booth."

Margaret must have been waiting at the other end of the wire, for Clavering got her almost immediately.

As soon as he mentioned his name, she said: "Mr. Clavering, will you meet me tomorrow at half past 8 at the station? I am coming over in answer to a telegram I received this afternoon and I would appreciate it very much if you would let me bother you to the extent of taking me immediately from the station to the hospital."

"I shall be very glad to do it, Mrs. Earle."

"Thank you so much."

"Dave," said Clavering later, "you can imagine how flabbergasted I was when I heard the receiver click. She didn't even name the hospital, not to mention either man. Of course, I realize that she did not know that I had sent either one of the telegrams, consequently she could not tell me that she had received two. Well, anyway, she, too, has burned her ships behind her. She is coming over here tomorrow morning in answer to one of those telegrams."

"Of course, stupid, but which?"

There was a long silence. Finally Davis spoke again: "I think it is Glendening. I am sure that, had it been Milton, she would have mentioned his name. She must certainly know that whatever we may say or do, our sympathy is with MIT. She wanted to spare our feelings."

"I am not so sure, Dave. It can be reasoned another way. You noticed she didn't say anything about wanting to avoid Doris. If she comes in answer to Glendening's wire she would naturally want Doris to be kept away."

"Well, the next 24 hours will tell the story. I'll be glad to have the answer. This thing has me all wound up."

U. S. to Aid in Probe of Klan

MEDFORD, July 20.—Federal and state officials have united in the prosecution of the Ku Klux Klan outrages in Jackson county. The special grand jury has been summoned at the request of the attorney general, who will be represented by Assistant Attorney General Lillioqvist. Hearings will be held in the federal court room in the federal building while the marshaling of the evidence is in charge of T. M. Word of the federal secret service, department of justice.

Subpoenas were issued today by the sheriff's office for scores of witnesses to appear Monday, July 24, before the special grand jury ordered by Governor Olcott to investigate the series of outrages in this county last spring. Among the number was Assistant District Attorney Doran of Los Angeles county, California, who has been requested to bring with him data and letters filed in a raid following the Ingleside affair, and bearing on the local situation.

The outrages to be investigated are "necktie parties" perpetrated in this county last March and April, in which J. F. Hale, a piano dealer of the city was a victim, being tortured and threatened with hanging. Arthur Burr, a negro, upon the completion of a 30 day sentence for bootlegging was "captured," taken in an auto to the summit of the Siskiyou and after having a rope tied around his neck was told to run.

Two Sides of Turnover

The alert business man dealing with present day conditions knows that the big word today is "Turnover." Whether he be a merchant, manufacturer, jobber, or banker, he sees that one thing with a clear vision unbiased by the limits of his own business. It is in the air, and on the tip of every tongue.

And yet many of them—entirely too many—are thinking on only one side of Turnover. They think of it as meaning rapid selling—putting money in and getting it out quickly and at a profit. They realize that they must put greatly increased efforts back of all their plans for selling and distribution.

The other half of Turnover is the consumer. All selling plans and efforts fail if the consumer doesn't want to buy. His desire for the product must be created. He must meet the seller half way. He must be in a mood to buy before the salesman meets him across the counter.

That is the function of Advertising—to create consumer demand and consumer preference.

With this demand as a fact all selling plans have a chance to succeed. Without it they fail. The only chance for salesmanship to succeed without an existing demand is for salesmanship to assume the task that belongs to advertising—the task of creating demand.

If the present efforts that are being put into selling were amply supported by a corresponding effort to create consumer demand through Advertising, the business conditions of this country would be rapidly changed into an era of great prosperity—in spite of Old World conditions and everything else.

The proof of this is in the fact that right now, under these very conditions, the manufacturers who are putting proper emphasis on creating a demand for their product, as well as selling it, are doing a big business and are actually getting the high turnover that others are trying so strenuously to get through intensive selling.
