ROSEBURG NEWS-REVIEW, JULY 27, 1922. THE AGRICULTURAL SITUATION.

Good crops at fair prices make the United States prosperous. Nearly one-half the people of the country are directly dependent upon agriculture and a much larger proportion are indirectly dependent upon it for livelihood.

It is now mid-season and although adverse weather might result in marked downward revision of crop estimates, it can be safely assumed that the crop year 1922 will be reasonably satisfactory. Even if harvest results should fall below the yield which has been forecast there is no doubt that the United States has a good wheat crop.

The American farmer is assured of a market. The domestic market is the greatest consuming market of the world, the population of this country being equal to the combined population of the United Kingdom and the German republic.

The last two years have been discouraging to farmers, but they are increasingly becoming aware of their advantageous competitive position and are recovering their old confidence. Prices of leading farm products are now much above their recent low point and also well above the pre-war level.

MEN AND PARTIES.

Party ties hang loosely in these days, and many people claim the two leading organizations stand for about the same thing. They feel that people belong to this or that party just because their fathers or grandfathers did, and could assign no real reason for their choice.

That something over $88 per capita is too great a tax to pay is generally conceded, but that is what it is costing Oregonians. The only consolation to be offered is that it is not so bad as it might be.

It didn't take a bunch of business men over one hour and thirty minutes this morning to determine a feasible detour between this city and Winchester. Now, how long will it take to get the detour opened to traffic?

Here's hoping it don't rain for two months. Then is can come down in "sheets" to wash off our miles of fine pavement now under way.

FISHIN' TIME FUN.

"Fishin' time is with us again. Through weary months of waiting, while river, pond and lake were chained in fetters of ice, the angler has longed and looked for this season of the year," says the Winnebago City Enterprise.

HIS ONE WEAKNESS.

"Is Jones a truthful man?" "Yes, generally, but he will go to any length in telling a fish story."—Portland (Me.) Express.

Fisherman (chumming up to stranger in smoking car)—"You're not supposed to fish hereabouts this month but I've 100 lbs. of fine cod in the baggage car."

Stranger—"Say, d'ye know who I am?" Fisherman—"No, who are you?" Stranger—"I'm the state game warden."

Fisherman—"Well, I'm the biggest liar in the state."—"Topics of the Day" Films.

NARROW ESCAPE.

"The biggest fish got away." "That's what they all say. I'll bet if I hooked a big fish I would land him."

"So would I. But he didn't even show up where I was fishing."—Houston Chronicle.

POOR PUSS.

A wicked cat once thought it nice to grab for fish beneath the ice; He seized a big one by the fin. The fish then dived, the cat fell in. Moral: Don't try to catch too big a fish.—Aesop's Film Fables.

KID, NO. 0003.

Willie—"Mamma, will you answer just one more question? Then I won't bother you any more." Mother—"All right, then. What is it?"

Willie—"Why is it that the little fishes don't drown before they learn to swim?"—New York Sunday News.

SURVIVAL OF FITTEST.

Mother—"Willie, have you fed the gold fish?" Dutiful Willie—"Yes, Mamma, I fed them to the cat."—"Topics of the Day" Films.

NO CHANCE AT ALL.

The Angler—"Is this a public lake my man?" The Inhabitant—"Aye" The Angler—"Then it won't be a crime if I land a fish?" The Inhabitant—"No, it'll be a miracle."—Edinburgh Scotsman.

Ye of of Prunes has witnessed some fine lookin' fellers down at the beach with sunbrowned backs and thighs, never'thing, but none of 'em look half as good as the contestants in Prune Pickin's most beautiful man contest. Now Frinastance there's Dave Crooby of Riddle who today enters the field and hopes to cop off the honors from the other Beau Brummets of the village.

FEET.

Next to ages, feet rank highest in the national list of delicate subjects. Feet come in all sizes from 5-A-A or some such insignificant number, on up. Few women, if they're allowed to name their shoes size have feet larger than the 5-A-A but we notice that shoe manufacturers seem to be kept pretty much on the job turning out feet houses in the "on up" sizes. Some folks manage to steer their navigators around without attracting an awful lot of attention but most of us are always aware of their presence. Especially when it becomes necessary to parade across a street lined with gazers-on.

LAFE PERKINS SEZ:

"We'd take violin lessons but we hate to ask for 'cat gut' at the music store."

FISH SENSITIVE TO CHANGE

Sudden Variation of Temperature Will Drive Them to Distant Waters or Destroy Them.

Fish are very quick to feel a change of temperature in their native element, and sudden cooling or heating of the water is very injurious to them.

A hot summer has often been known to drive herrings to find cooler waters at a distance. Some years ago, a fearful storm raged along the eastern coast of North America. After it had subsided, the sea was strewn with millions of fish, a fish like a cod, but attaining a weight of 50 pounds or more.

Congers and pilchards have died from cold off the Cornish coast, and the once plentiful herring-fish have never been seen in the shallow waters of Cornwall since a violent easterly gale blew in 1870.

WAS GIFT OF MAXIMILIAN

Romantic Story of Carlotta's Bracelet, Now Property of a Popular Spanish Dancer.

One of the most romantic survivals of the Mexican revolution is the story of the bracelet of Carlotta.

Carlotta, daughter of the king of the Belgians, was the devoted wife of Maximilian, whom Louis Napoleon placed on the throne of Mexico, and who, after establishing himself in imperial grandeur, was defeated by the republican troops under Juarez, and with two of his generals Miramon and Mejia, was executed by a firing squad on the hill of Las Campanas in 1867.

The bracelet was an exquisite affair of gold given by the emperor to Carlotta at the time of their marriage. When Carlotta left Mexico the bracelet was given by her to one of her ladies-in-waiting. But in the flight from Mexico it was lost. It did not appear again, as far as known, until 1914, when it was seen by an American admiring the wrist of a woman companion of one of Emiliano Zapata's generals. This general shortly afterward killed the woman in a fit of jealousy and the bracelet was taken from him later by the Americans. The bracelet now adorns the wrist of a very beautiful Spanish dancer. It is said to have been presented to her by a diplomat, "in appreciation of her art."

Gobelin Tapestries.

The most famous products in the history of weaving are the so-called Gobelin tapestries, fashioned in the factory on the site where many years ago Jean and Phillippe Gobelin, merchant dyers of scarlet, had their works. The name of Gobelin has always been identified with the product of these ancient looms, which, for over 250 years have turned out tapestries solely for the state. In times of peace these never leave France except as gifts to visiting kings and chief magistrates.

Formerly 300 artisans and apprentices were employed in the Gobelin works, weaving textiles after designs by Le Brun, Boucher and many celebrated artists. Today the workmen number 60 and, as an expert weaver can produce only five square feet a year, it is understandable why the tapestries bring such exceedingly high prices. It is estimated that the minimum value of a square foot of Gobelin tapestry is $250.

Grant Was Extremely Sensitive.

General Grant seems to have been extremely sensitive. When he came to the end of his second term at West Point he was given a furlough and went home on leave in his gray uniform. The little country town in which his parents lived was immensely amused by the smart uniform, and the jeers of the inhabitants were never-ending. Grant was so hurt by them that he never again willingly wore a uniform. Whenever the regulations insisted, he mounted it, but as soon as permitted, he doffed it again.

Hearts of Royalty Preserved.

The last English sovereign to have the heart removed from the body after death and to be separately preserved in a silver urn, was "good Queen Anne." The hearts of her sister, Queen Mary, and the latter's consort, King William III, of Charles II and of Queen Elizabeth, are also cared for in Westminster abbey. The heart of Richard Coeur-de-Lion is still in the custody and care of the canon and chapter of the cathedral of Rouen. It is under his recumbent effigy, in that ancient fane, and was brought to light after the lapse of six centuries, in 1838, enclosed in caskets of lead and of silver, and withered almost to the semblance of an autumn leaf.

Father, Daughter Have Narrow Escape

What came near being a double tragedy occurred yesterday evening at Cloake's ferry when J. A. Peterson and his small daughter narrowly escaped drowning. The little girl was playing in the water when she suddenly went into a deep hole. Her father rushed into the water to save her and as he was fully dressed became exhausted while trying to swim to shore with her. Mrs. Peterson being unable to swim, seized a long pole and wading out as far as she could managed to get the pole out where they could reach it and dragged them to shore. Mr. Peterson collapsed as he was drawn to the bank and it was necessary to call a physician from the city before he could be revived.

MAN GIVES WIFE GLYCERINE MIXTURE

She had stomach trouble for years. After giving her simple buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., as mixed in Adler-ika, her husband says: "My wife feels fine now and has gained weight. It is wonderful stomach medicine." Adler-ika acts on BOTH upper and lower bowels, removing foul matter which poisoned stomach and which you never thought was in your system. EXCELLENT for gas on the stomach or chronic constipation. Guards against appendicitis. The impurities it brings out will surprise you. Nathan Fullerton, druggist.

English Hold Fears That Nation Soon Will Go D...

By DAVID M. CHURCH, International News Service Staff Correspondent. LONDON, July 27.—"Prohibition is marching up the roadways of the British mind today, and these roadways cannot be closed."

This is the defiant announcement made by John G. Woolley, temperance advocate from the United States, who is busy at work driving the "demon rum" out of its haunts into the open for a final fight in the "tight little isle."

Much as they would like to scoff at Woolley there are a whole lot of Brits who are afraid that he is right.

Time was when reference to the "tight little isle" was more or less double-edged, for about half of the isle was more or less "tight" after nightfall. But things have changed in Britain since the war.

The old "public house" that stands on the corner of the street and emits odors of stale beer and staler tobacco smoke is not doing as well as it used to.

Workmen Discuss Issue. The "pub" is still the "poor man's club," and the laboring fraternity gather nightly to discuss the affairs of the world over an "arfapintabitter," which is the equivalent to a "schooner of beer," but they call it a day when the "arfapintabitter" is consumed, and the "Bobbies" are not kept busy helping the "clubmen" homeward.

Along Regent street, Oxford street, and in the environs of Piccadilly the "pubs" begin to look lonesome after 8:30 at night. Everyone seems to have gone home, and the barmaids powder their noses in majestic solemnity, awaiting the closing hour.

Along Fleet street the "pubs" are busier, for there are many night workers who are anxious to get a bit of stimulant to carry them through until morning.
