"Working Girl" Asks $50,000 Heart Balm of Millionaire to Prove Caste millionaire is a member of the board of trustees.

"And that he left her waiting at the church."
In her suit Miss Grout says:
"I was all prepared for my wedding—dressed in the things so dear to a girl's heart. But my groom-to-be did not call for me. I telephoned him. I was frantic. He told me I would have to postpone the wedding. I asked why."
Says He Repudiated Her.
"He said that I was just a working girl—that his set could not accept me until I had elevated my caste."
"It is not that the $50,000 I ask will mend my broken heart," Miss Grout said after filing her suit. "My real reason is to avenge the slur of so-called society against the girl who works."
"I am proud of the bit I contributed to the work-a-day world. I glory in the girl who works—no matter what her position in life. I believe her more fitted to be a wife than the social drone of the pink teas, whose only labor is the hours she spends under the hand of the beauty specialist."
"If I have beauty, which Mr. Brubaker claimed, it is just the beauty of the girl who is lived a healthy, happy life—a mirror of the happiness a girl finds in the knowledge that she is contributing something to the world."
Miss Grout claims it will be balm enough for her heart if a jury holds that the working girl is not of lower social caste than her more fortunate sister—the daughter of wealth.
Brubaker had promised to file answer to Miss Grout's suit.
He will prove, he claims, "that the 'working girl' vamped him" into his proposal of marriage—that she aspired to be an "old man's darling" and in reality "loved a handsomer and younger man."
Brubaker, despite Miss Grout's denial, says he will name the man.

WEALTHY SUITOR JILTED HER AT Church After Buying Wed- ding Ring, Girl Asserts.

By JACK CARBERY
(International News Service Staff Correspondent.)
KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 3.—"Can the girl who works for a living ever reach the heights of social leadership as a rich man's wife?"
"Or does her association with the hard, practical world of business unfit her for the softness of the country club veranda, the bridge tea of the exclusive set and as hostess to the 'four hundred'?"
A jury in circuit court here will be asked to solve this age-old problem—to write into the books of Blackstone, in their cob-webbed shelves, the answer to the problem of "caste."
Sues Millionaire Suitor.
Miss Landis Grout, 25 year old stenographer, pretty, vivacious, diminutive, brunette—the "Angel Eyes" of Jonathan A. Brubaker, 63 year old millionaire grain man, church director and clubman—asks the question.
It is in the form the a heart-blaim suit filed by Miss Grout, in which she demands $50,000 to soothe the aches of blighted romance.
Miss Grout's suit has become the one topic of the country club, the afternoon bridge and is brought up at every social function for discussion, not alone by feminine society, but by the social set's male contingent as well.
In her petition Miss Grout says:
"Was Working Girl."
She was a working girl—a stenographer.
In a fellow business man's office the millionaire grain man chanced to see her one day—
"He told me it was my eyes which attracted him—that is why he always called me his 'Angel Eyes,' Miss Grout says.

That the millionaire pursued her every step from the moment of their meeting until a few hours before the time set for their wedding on May 31, is another allegation of the suit.
"Miss Grout listened to his plea to resign her position," her suit continues.
She further says:
"Gave Her $4,000 Ring."
"The millionaire purchased a $4,000 engagement ring."
"Bought her a $4,000 coupe."
"Purchased the wedding ring, inscribing it: 'To my Angel Eyes—always.'"
"That he purchased her wedding gown."
"Employed the minister—arranged for the service in the exclusive Grand Avenue Temple church, of which the

IT'S A QUEER WORLD!

(International News Service.)
BUCYRUS, Ohio, Aug. 3.—Jimmie Fugner, a Bucyrus lad, has his own opinion as to what constitutes an immovable force. Never, never again will he attempt to spank a cow with the front end of an auto.
Jimmie was driving his car along the smoothly-paved thoroughfare, several miles east of Bucyrus, at a fair rate of speed when he saw directly ahead, traveling without warning tail lights, a lonesome cow.
"The animal was going 'on low' in the same direction that Jimmie's car was moving. In less time than it takes to tell it the automobile and the cow made a most forceful contact. There was a frightful crash, a surprised 'Moo!' and the automobile stopped dead.
Not so with the cow. She scrambled to her feet and shot off into the darkness, leaving the car with the radiator smashed back on the hood, the hood bent back on the cow and the cow slightly crumpled.
The wrecking crew towed the auto back into town to the garage. Although no one was injured it is thought that the cow needed some court plaster next morning.

Officers Start Campaign Against Those Who are Using Public Highways for Modern Courting Methods—Declare That "Clean Up" will be Started Without Delay

"Petting parties," midnight joy-rides parking of darkened autos along the highway and other 20th century amusements will be the object of a strict law enforcement campaign in Douglas county, according to the officers today. For some time past complaints have been received by the authorities concerning the activities of the younger generation and some of the older and the officials are going to take steps to stop some of these "night riding" tactics.
The officers state that cars will be used to patrol along the highways every night and the "strong arm of the law" will be stretched out to stop the flappers and cake-eaters from using the public roadways for their "petting parties."
Information has also been received that dope parties are being staged. The officers are using every means to put a stop to this. It is said that several boys are securing cocaine from some source and furnishing it to their friends. The authenticity of this report cannot be determined but whether true or not, the ban has been placed on midnight spongers and a general cleanup campaign inaugurated.
The city ordinance governing dance halls will also be strictly enforced. It is charged that the conduct of some of the dancers at public affairs is absolutely disgraceful. A city ordinance prohibits children under age from attending dances without their parents or guardians and it is alleged that that law is being violated constantly. The officers will be instructed to visit the dance halls and "send home" the youngsters or give them a good "spanking."
