RECKLESS YOUTH AT THE LIBERTY THEATER TOMORROW

The Selnick company springs a surprise on local theatergoers at the Liberty theater with Elaine Hammerstein in "Reckless Youth." In its general nature, the photoplay is a modern society drama. The surprise came when there was screened a tremendous "effect" which would do credit to a production of the pure melodramatic class. A collision between an ocean-going yacht and a big liner is shown with a degree of realism that fairly raises the spectators from their seats.

"Reckless Youth" is from a story by Cosmo Hamilton. The screen version is by Ralph Ince, who has made so many big pictures for the Selnick company. Niles Welch appears in leading support of the star. Myrtle Steadman, Louise Prussing and Frank Currier are prominently listed in the cast. At the Liberty theater Thursday and Friday.

NAZIMOVA SAYS EVERY WOMAN SHOULD SEE THE HISEN CLASSIC

That there is a great lesson for every woman, no matter what her age may be—even though she be a high school girl or a grandmother—is the contention of Nazimova, star and producer in "A Doll's House," the popular Hiseen drama, which has been transferred to the motion picture screen and booked by the management of the Liberty theater for the last time tonight.

VISITORS AT THE AUTO CAMP GROUNDS

Short Stories of the Strangers Who Stop in Their Journey Along the Highway.

Arriving in Roseburg yesterday afternoon by auto from Salem, D. W. Smith and wife, of Fresno, California, camped here for the second time this season. They are enroute home after a visit with friends at the Oregon Capital. Mr. and Mrs. Smith lived in the Willamette valley from 1863 to 1877, when they moved to Fresno. When they traveled to the Golden state in 1877 the trip was made in September, with a four-horse team and light wagon. The rains came early and roads were so bad that they had hard pulling to get through, because, as Mr. Smith stated today, there were no paved highways those days. On the trip yesterday they drove through rain as far as Jefferson, when they merged into better weather, finishing the day's drive in the glorious climate of the Umpqua country in the evening.

A. M. Hole and wife, of St. Helens, Oregon, where they own a garage, were in camp yesterday evening. They report they are touring Oregon and expressed gratification for the splendid camping facilities in Roseburg. Mrs. Hole stated that tourists had told them the camp ground here was worth making a long drive to reach.

F. R. Leach and wife and daughter, Helen, of Medford, camped here last evening on the return trip from a visit to Portland and the beach resorts. They had a delightful trip.

J. Overholzer and wife and baby, of Berkeley, California, who have been visiting at Seattle, arrived at the auto camp yesterday evening on the home trip.

A party from Seattle consisting of Dr. D. W. Dobbins and family, and E. K. Dobbins and wife and children, and Mrs. Henry Schaefer, were camped here last night. The auto party consisting of E. K. Dobbins and wife and guest, arrived after W. D. Dobbins had reached Roseburg, and surprised the latter, who is enroute to Los Angeles. The former will return north from this city.

Other arrivals registering are M. H. Sandstrom, Seattle; M. Mitchell, Long Beach; P. D. Leach and family, Medford; L. J. B. Haber and wife, Fort Baker; M. Bushman and wife, Los Angeles; H. L. Marx and wife, Los Angeles; C. J. Williams and wife, Oakland, Cal.; E. Schmitt and wife, Fresno; J. W. Emmerson and wife, San Francisco; R. J. Bullen and wife, Yakima; T. H. Harris and wife, Vallejo; E. M. Pugh and family, Albany; J. L. Poote and wife, Los Angeles; L. M. Mills, Portland; C. Rothwell and wife, Oakland; W. H. Hatten and family, Holliston; H. Looney and wife, Jordan Valley; J. L. Henley and wife, Redding; R. G. Cudde and wife, Seattle; W. J. Fletcher and wife, Santa Cruz; W. G. Ware and family, Los Angeles; H. E. Riley and wife, Brookings, South Dakota; J. P. Morgan and wife, Holliston; H. D. Gibbs, San Pedro; J. Johnson and wife, Vallejo; R. J. Sorenson and family, San Diego; Dr. Armstrong, Boise; M. C. McIntyre, Los Angeles; A. D. Vandergriff and family, Portland; W. H. Parker and family, Salem; F. W. Cately and family, Delta, Ohio; R. Sacks and wife, Boise; G. E. Cornell and family, San Diego; H. J. Reynolds and family, Pullman, Washington; J. Bowen and wife, San Francisco; J. G. Graves and family, Chico; P. A. Brenault and wife, Taft, California; A. L. Luning, Portland; W. M. Miller and family, Los Angeles; J. Sorenson and family, Portland; C. C. Anderson and family, Hood River; S. Jones and wife, Long Beach.

What Happened When Sheila Elliston Refused Love

By Idah McGlone Gibson

THE TURNING POINT

"Is it possible, Mrs. Wilmington, that you do not know my story? I thought Mrs. Walton or Dr. Thornton had told you. That was one reason I have been so happy here with you."

"Oh I am so sorry! So sorry! I have felt that there was one woman in this world who loved me for myself in spite of—"

"What are you saying, Sheila?" I remonstrated, for I saw her emotions were overcoming her.

For answer Sheila Elliston dropped her bronze head in my lap and her whole body shook with sobs.

Wise in the ways of women I let her cry. I knew nothing that I could say would console her as much and so I just put my hand on her bright hair in a way that might make her understand—when the relief of tears had eased her emotions—that I was her friend.

"Oh, I did not think I would have to go over that terrible affair again."

Her sobs subsided gradually. Finally she raised her head and said brokenly: "Mrs. Wilmington, I know I owe it to you to tell you everything, and I shall. I'll begin at the very first, for I shall feel better when you know all."

"I had no premonition of danger the day I was assigned to the Walter Jones case. I knew, of course, that he was the son of this—perhaps the richest man in town and being an only son, his father was supposed to idolize him."

"Perhaps the father deceived himself into thinking that he did love his son, but he never loved anyone except himself. He had no interest in anything or anyone unless that thing or that person ministered to his pride or his egoism."

"Why, Mrs. Wilmington, that old man set out to crush me, an innocent girl who had never intended to do him the slightest harm."

"He flung me aside from the pathway of his son and in doing so he crushed everything that was good out of the soul of the boy he pretended to love."

"Oh, well, why should I grieve. He is dead now, and he died an old, thwarted and disappointed man."

"They told me at the hospital that no one who might have loved him was at his bedside when he died."

"Mrs. Wilmington, I know I am a wicked girl, but I would not be honest if I were not glad that he died alone. He flung me aside as one would a little blossoming weed that had unwittingly strayed into a garden of carefully nurtured flowers."

"I was very happy, very innocent, very ambitious as a little girl that day when I was called on that case."

"I was to graduate in a few weeks, and it was the first time that I had had a case of such importance. I will not deny that I was very glad that Walter Jones' family was wealthy and influential.

"I determined to do my work so well that in the end I could restore to the father his son and heir, fully recovered and I hoped it would make me friends and perhaps help build up a clientele after I left the hospital."

"If I had known what was going to happen I would rather have killed myself than to have gone near Walter Jones."

"That case brought me all the grief and sorrow that has come into my life. Even when my mother and father died, I had not the agony that my contact with Walter Jones brought me."

"It nearly ruined me, mentally, morally and physically."

"It is only recently that I have just been able to arrange my affairs in such a way, that I can live in any degree of comfort."

"Why, do you know, Mrs. Wilmington, that the first time I have been able to wear a pretty gown was here in your house. I bought that little evening dress that you admired so much with the money you paid me."

"You see, I was quite in debt to Mrs. Walton, and I would not buy a single thing for myself that could in any way be designated as a luxury until I had paid her. No woman in the world could be kinder to me than she has been and is."

"When I think that it is in the power of men of wealth to do the things that Walter Jones, Sr., did to me, I almost feel that there can be no God. And the awful part, Mrs. Wilmington, is that I probably am not unique, that there are plenty of girls in this world who have been ruthlessly ruined because of some man's ambition."

"I did not try to stem the torrent of thoughts that were rushing to Sheila's lips. I determined to let her tell her story in her own way."

"I confess I wondered what was coming. Naturally I could think of but one thing for whenever a woman tells you that she has sinned or a disgrace has come upon her only think of a shattered seventh commandment."

"And yet I could not think this of Sheila. Her face was too sweet and innocent; there was no deep emotion expressed in it, such as comes to the woman who loves unwisely. Beside I knew that my friend, Mrs. Walton, was a very conventional woman and that she had—for Sheila, if she had that Sheila Elliston had done anything whereby she might lose her self-respect."

"I was all at a loss, but at last I came to the conclusion that Sheila was making mountains out of molehills. I did not realize the monstrous thing that she had to tell me."
