

Stability starts with the crude

One of the most important requirements of a good motor oil is that it possess stability—that is, that it maintain its chemical composition and its lubricating body under all conditions of engine operation.

If an oil changes its chemical composition—"breaks down"—at high operating temperatures, it can no longer maintain a lubricating film between the bearing surfaces, and its value as a lubricant is destroyed.

Certain crude oils possess a higher degree of stability than others. Because of its large production of practically every type of crude, this company is free to choose for the making of Zerolene only those crudes which are particularly adapted for the purpose.

The Patented Vacuum Process

In the process of distilling and refining these selected crudes, it is of the greatest importance not to destroy their natural "oiliness" and stability. For this reason we employ our own patented high-vacuum process exclusively. By this process the oil produced—Zerolene—retains all the natural "oiliness" and stability of the original, selected crude from which it is made.

No other refiner on the Pacific Coast uses any form of vacuum distillation. No other refiner in the United States uses as high a vacuum as this company.

Zerolene of the correct grade for your car gives perfect lubrication and permits the development of maximum power, speed and gasoline mileage.

Powder Worker Dies From Injuries

James Monroe, powder worker at the Oak Creek rock quarry, died last night from the injuries sustained when an explosion drove a drill thru his skull. No hopes for his recovery were held forth from the time he was injured, and the physicians were surprised that he remained alive as long as he did after the terrible injury.

Coroner Ritter made an inquest today, determining that death was purely accidental.

A charge had been exploded, one stick of powder failing to go off. When the men were working around the place where the blast had been set off, Monroe's drill struck the exploded stick of powder, setting it off, at that time receiving the injuries which caused his death. A careful search of his possessions failed to reveal a trace of any relatives, except a brother in the east, who has not been heard from for 30 years. As his present address is unknown, there is little possibility of reaching him.

The body was buried this afternoon at the Masonic cemetery.

Dillard Pioneer Passes Away

David J. Noah, aged 80 years, a pioneer resident of the Dillard vicinity, died today after a short illness.

Mr. Noah was born in Boone county, Illinois, and crossed the plains more than 50 years ago to settle in the Oregon country. Nearly all of his later life was spent at Dillard, where he was known and loved by all.

He is survived by a widow and several children.

The funeral will be held from the Dillard home at 9 o'clock Friday morning, the Rev. C. H. Hilton, pastor of the Roseburg Christian church, officiating. Following the services at the family home, the body will be taken to the Camas Valley cemetery where the interment will be in charge of the I. O. O. F. lodge, of which the deceased was a member for a great many years.

WINDOW SALE SATURDAY.
The ladies of the M. E. church, South, will hold a sale of home cooked food at the McKean, Darby and Baldwin furniture store, Saturday, August 19. A good assortment of food will be on sale.

BIG NEW YORK SUCCESS COMING HERE FOR RUN

"Perjury," a William Fox super-special which was the talk of New York while running at a prominent Broadway theater, will come to the Antlers theater tonight. It presents William Farnum in a role similar in several essential respects to that of Jean Valjean in Victor Hugo's "Les Misérables," in which this famous emotional screen star made a tremendous hit. New York reviewers and theater-goers, during the run of "Perjury" in the metropolis, declared that William Farnum surpassed all former efforts in the expression of human emotion. They predicted that the gripping proto-drama will establish itself permanently as one of the classics of the screen.

ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN AT THE LIBERTY THEATER

Cosmo Hamilton, among the most popular writers of current fiction, is responsible for the story of "Reckless Youth," starring Elaine Hammerstein, announced as the attraction at the Liberty theater for two days, beginning today.

Miss Hammerstein has the role of a young girl who adopted as her motto to quite early in life the two simple words, "Who cares?" and, careless of all conventions, came within an ace of wrecking not only her own happiness, but that of a number of others with whom she came in contact.

Niles Welch appears in leading support of the popular Selznick star. Other widely-known screen players in the cast include Huntley Gordon, Myrtle Stedman, Louise Prussing, and Frank Currier.

What Happened When Sheila Elliston Refused Love

By Idah McGlone Gibson

THE MEETING

Sheila was silent so long that I suggested: "Dear girl, you are very tired. Would you rather wait until morning?"

"Oh, I am keeping you up. I am so sorry. It is very selfish of me. I did not realize that it was getting so late."

"No, no, my dear, please do not think that I am tired or bored or uninterested. I am all sympathy, I am only thinking of you. I would be very glad to sit up with you until morning if necessary."

"Dear, dear Mrs. Wilmington. You and Mrs. Walton and Dr. Thornton and your brother, Phil, have made me understand that there are good people in the world. I am not tired. I only do not know how to begin my story. I thought you knew it. That was the awful part of it. I thought everyone in this town knew it. Why, it was in all the papers and Mrs. Walton would not let me change my name. She said that some day I would be exonerated, and she determined that I should then be able to say that I had never done anything that would disgrace my father's name."

As Sheila was talking I tried to think of any scandal that had appeared in the papers. It must have been while I was away.

"How long ago did this happen, Sheila?" I asked.

"Just at the beginning of the war." "Oh, my dear, anything could be forgotten in that time," I comforted her. "I was here at the time, but I have only a faint recollection of seeing something in the paper about the Jones family and I cannot recall it now."

"If you don't mind, Mrs. Wilmington, I will tell the story tonight, for I am afraid that if I should see Phil again I would not have the courage to tell you."

Here I interrupted her. "What has Phil been saying to you, Sheila?" Of course I knew, but I wanted to hear from her lips. I wanted to get her reaction.

"Won't you let me wait until the end of my story. Let me come to Phil in his turn."

"Perhaps that would be better."

I settled myself a little more comfortably in the big chair, and after looking into my face a moment, Sheila drew nearer to me with a little cuddling motion and I threw my arms about her shoulder.

"Did you ever see Walter Jones, Mrs. Wilmington? Oh, I don't mean Walter Jones, Sr. I mean his son."

I shook my head.

"He was very handsome, and if he had had the right kind of environment he would be today a splendid man."

"Walter intended to do right, but he was very weak, always."

"He has light brown hair and big brown eyes, just like his sister, Susanne. His mouth, which in his sister is called beautiful, in his face is too much of a cupid's bow to be anything but weak. His teeth are very white and his smile so winning that after the more or less ugly men I had seen at the hospital, he seemed to me like a young god."

"I didn't see him when he was brought in, but while he was waiting for his nurses—for he was to have two—I was given his case until one of them arrived."

"He looked up at me so ingenuously and exclaimed: 'Great Scott. It is worth being sick, isn't it?' Although many men had said those very words to me before, it seemed to me that Walter Jones had given them a different intonation."

"I was awfully sorry that I was not to have the chance to nurse him, but of course money was no object with the Jones family and, as I have said, he was to have two graduate nurses."

"Pretty soon one of them came and I was sent back to my own case—which was that of a beast of a man in the next room."

"The moment I arrived in the room this man began to abuse me because I had left him so long. He said I had played politics with Dr. Thornton so I could have a young and handsome man to make love to, instead of being obliged to take care of him."

"He asked me for a drink of water and as I bent over him to lift him up he said: 'At least, young woman, you will kiss me goodnight.'"

"I don't know just what I did, but I think I slapped him. He had been so repulsive for a long while that this was the last straw. After a few moments, in which I had told him what I thought of him, he was well enough that I might tell him this, without hurting him—I pulled myself together and ran out into the hall."

"Walter Jones' door was open and he called to me in a hoarse voice: 'Come over here to me, nurse.'"

"I was surprised to find him alone, but he explained that there had been some confusion about the nurses who would take care of him."

"I must have looked at him somewhat uncertainly, as I was so surprised and hurt at what had just passed, for it was really the first time that any of my masculine patients had gone quite so far."

"Come over here, nurse, and stop trembling. I won't hurt you," he said. Then I noticed I was holding my hands outstretched and they were shaking."

"I quickly dropped them and went over toward his bed."

"For a moment he just looked at me, and then he spoke as though to himself."

"God! Is it possible that girls like you, trying to relieve a man of pain, must submit to such indignities?"

"Then I realized that he must have heard what that terrible old man had said to me."

Tomorrow—The Man.
