Rickey Hands palm to Cobb: Brains in Feet or Isn't Human, Avers

By DAVIS J. WALSH, International News Service Sports Editor.

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—When speaking of great ball players, as he frequently does, Branch Rickey, manager of the St. Louis Cardinals, starts and finishes with one man only. That man is not Rogers Hornsby, although the good Mr. Rickey might be pardoned for being a bit partial toward the Texan in view of the fact that Hornsby is a member of his ball club. Neither is he George Staler, whom Rickey really developed while coaching the University of Michigan ball team. If hounded and harried about the matter, Mr. Rickey may be persuaded to admit that he did a good job with George and that certainly Hornsby is something of an asset to the Cardinals.

Cobb the Greatest. But when it comes down to the greatest of them all, Rickey knows only one ball player, and his name is Cobb.

One of Branch Rickey's favorite stories, if that noted raconteur can be said to favor any particular anecdote, deals with the game Cobb won from the Browns by a base on balls. At that stage of his checkered career Rickey happened to be manager of the Browns. Hence the occasion remains fixed in his mind much in the same manner that a cornerstone remains fixed in a building. It has been his singular contention since that Cobb has brains in his feet.

"The score was tied, with two out in the ninth," says Rickey, in his best platform manner, "when Cobb came up and worked Carl Wellman for a pass. He immediately took a long lead off first and drew a throw.

Leary, our first baseman, lobbed the ball back to the box, and immediately Cobb dashed away from the bag again, drawing another throw.

"Again Leary lobbed the ball back, and again Cobb streaked off first. Wellman snatched the ball out of the air and whipped it back. Too late.

Worked It Overtime. "At this stage of the proceedings I thought I saw a chance to retire the side by catching Cobb napping. I stood up in the dugout and yelled: 'Do it again!'

"Leary drew back his arm and tossed the ball even higher than before, and away Cobb went, this time for second base, with no intermediate stops. Wellman reached high in the air, grabbed the ball and threw it in the dirt at Lavan's feet. It went into short center, and Cobb rushed for third.

"The centerfielder had backed up the play, and Cobb figured to be out a mile. The ball beat him by yards, but Austin tumbled momentarily, and right then and there Cobb showed that he either has brains in his feet or he isn't human.

"The ball was lying out there between Austin and the runner for only a fraction of a second, but in that instant Cobb did more thinking than the average ball player does in a season. Instead of sliding for the base he held for the ball, feet first, gave it a kick that sent it into the dugout and then went on to the plate with the winning run.

"It was a clear case of interference, but the umpire couldn't see it that way. And, besides, the game was over. You never can win an argument after the umpire call it a day."

Floyd Baker of Yoncalla Arrested

Floyd Baker, of Yoncalla, was arrested last night by Deputy Sheriff C. H. Daugherty on a charge of bootlegging and was brought to the city today to serve a sentence of twenty days in the county jail. Baker was arrested as he stepped into an alleyway in the rear of the Yoncalla bank building and offered a drink to a companion. The officer was standing near and overhearing the conversation placed Baker under arrest and appropriated a bottle containing a quart of liquor. Baker was arraigned before Justice J. J. Brown and paid a fine of $20 and costs which was imposed in addition to the jail sentence.

Hand Injured in Buzz Saw

H. Aline, laborer at the Kohlraegen apartments, suffered the loss of one finger and other bad injuries to his right hand last night, when the hand became entangled in the buzz-saw which he was operating. The middle finger was cut off at the second joint and the flesh was cut from two other fingers. The saw ripped into the palm of the hand, cutting the palm artery and inflicting a very bad wound. The injured man was taken to the office of Dr. Hoover, where the hand was dressed and he was then removed to Mercy hospital.

Honey Bee Cause of Auto Accident

A busy little honey bee which persisted in its efforts to perch on the nose of the driver, was the reason given by C. G. Session of Risby, Idaho, for driving on the left hand side of the road which resulted in a collision with the car of G. E. Ward, of 359 12th street, Portland. Mr. Session and his companion, Le. E. Anderson, were driving on the highway between Sutherlands and Wilbur when a bee darted into the car and buzzed angrily around Mr. Session's head. He reached up to brush it away and it came back harder than ever, straight at his nose. He made several frantic passes at it and in doing so swerved his car to the left hand side of the road where it struck the Portland man's machine. Both cars went over a ten foot embankment and were badly wrecked. Mr. Anderson was thrown through the top of the machine in which he was riding and sustained a broken nose. There were no other injuries.

Chinese Maiden Is Adept Student in Aviation Class of Flyer From Texas

Narrow Escape from Soldiers Who Loot Home of Her Father

EDNA LEE HOOKER, International News Service Staff Correspondent.

TOKYO, China, Aug. 23.—Miss Jue, daughter of Jue Kyth, director of aviation for the government and of the arsenal, who is a daring aviator, made a remarkable escape from the hands of the soldiers of the Chinese army at the time of the capture of Canton by General Chen Chiung-feng.

She has been a loyal Sun Yat-sen party for many years, having joined with Dr. Sun, put up a fight against the soldiers when they looted the arsenal. His guard numbered, however, and he was forced to flee.

During her escape upon Jue, the soldiers are reported to have looted her home and grave fears were expressed by the foreign community of the Chinese as to the fate of Miss Jue.

She was party, headed by Alfred J. Croft, instructor of aviation in Canton, former instructor at San Antonio, Texas, during the war with Germany, who is a keen aviator, waited until night, when she was a full in the air, then she escaped from an upper story of the house by climbing down a rope.

She landed in a court yard in the rear of the house and managed to escape to the home of friends. She took the first boat for Hongkong and is now in that city.

Miss Jue is a very remarkable young woman, according to Croft. She took to flying the way a duck takes to water and learned to fly in less than a month. She had only 19 hours' instruction—last November—but she mastered many of the spectacular stunts.

Does Difficult Stunts. She loops the loop, does the difficult hummelman turns, the falling leaf and tail-spins with the same ease and pleasure as a New York girl foxtrots.

Every day for several months Miss Jue has been out to the Canton aviation grounds. She takes a keen delight in flying, and is more steady and reliable than many of the young officers.

While Miss Jue has never been to America, having been educated at a girls' school in Shanghai, her father is a United States citizen.

She is 23 years of age and a believer in the advancement of the Chinese woman.

Croft, her instructor, began flying in 1914 in San Diego. Later he flew in many of the Atlantic coast fields and during the war was instructor at Brookfield, San Antonio, Texas. Following the war he came out to the Philippines with the Curtis Aviation company, later becoming instructor for the Philippine government.

Southern Government Instructor. Last year he came to Canton as instructor for the Southern government and has been training a large number of officers. According to Croft these "boys" can fly and—regardless of the side on which they are fighting—can do effective work. Croft had a narrow escape on the day the Chen Chiung-feng forces captured Canton. The military coup d'etat was accomplished so quickly that it was such a surprise that he did not know anything about it. He had an early breakfast and left Shameen Island, where the foreign community live and which was undisturbed during the night, and arrived at the aviation plant as usual.

He noticed an unusual number of soldiers in the streets, but didn't worry, as soldiers in China are as plentiful as real estate offices in southern California.

Finds Things in Tumult. Arriving at his office he found everything in disorder. Further investigation showed that the planes were damaged, the gasoline gone, all equipment vanished. Seeing three men who looked like coolies prowling around he put them out forcibly.

Then he was amazed to discover that they wore guns in their belts. More and more "soldiers" arrived, some in uniform, threatening and menacing. Without stopping to investigate the unusual circumstances or discussing matters, Croft departed in haste. Upon reaching his home he learned of the capture of Canton and the flight of President Sun Yat Sen, and then he began to worry about what might have happened.

PREPAREDNESS IS URGED BY THE FRENCHMEN

By FRANK E. MASON, International News Service Staff Correspondent.

PARIS, Aug. 23.—"Would France be ready if war should be declared tomorrow?" is the headline of an article written in l'Eclair, which declares that France is following her traditional policy of lack of precaution and preparation for war.

"Has France the maximum security which she owes herself?" demands Colonel Jean Tardis, in this newspaper. "Let us have the courage to reply: 'No!'" he answers his own question. "And why not? Because we are resting upon our laurels so dearly gathered. We are counting too much on the qualities of our race, on our spirit of assimilation and our genius for improvising, which enabled us for four years to parry the blows of our enemies. We have not paid sufficient attention to the three fundamental elements of any military organization. They are:

- "1. Man-power.
- "2. Material.
- "3. Intelligence section.

"Man-power is worth in war exactly according to the training received in time of peace. If the time of training is very short the military instruction should be so much more intensive; not a minute should be lost, not a point of instruction should be overlooked. Is this the case now? We cannot ignore the truth that in the entire military hierarchy there is too much of a disposition to forget the precious lessons learned in the last war. There is too much of a tendency to see in the military preparation a general speculative study, without a definite purpose. This might have been excusable 20 years ago, when the best minds considered that the era of warfare had passed. But this point of view is inadmissible today.

"During the war we improvised much of our material. In the case of a new conflict would this material be serviceable, or would the form of combat present a new aspect which would require new engines of war? It is necessary to know what is occurring from the point of view of military preparations on the other side of the Rhine and to study the proper defense.

"It has been said that without her chemists Germany would have been forced to give up the war in 1915. Today German industry is more flourishing than ever. Our neighbors on the other side of the Rhine can prepare in entire tranquillity, under the cover of peaceful industry, new weapons for new methods of warfare. It is necessary that our intelligence service ascertain whether electricity, which was not used in the last war, will not be the weapon of the battle of tomorrow.

"It is necessary to know what is happening in Germany. A well-organized intelligence service is indispensable. Does this service exist? If it does exist, does it dispose of sufficient money to function properly? It's doubtful.

"Summarizing, we are not taking into sufficient account the human factor in training for war; we have ample material—that is certain; but its value in the last war was in indication of what it will be worth in the next. Finally, we are ignorant of what the German scientists are doing to prepare for the next war, and we do not dispose of enough funds for our own scientists to compete with them."
