What Happened When Sheila Elliston Refused Love

By Adah McGlone Gibson

LIGHT COMES

"I do not understand what you mean, Sheila." My voice did not hold the coldness I had intended it should because I had caught the misery in her eyes.

"You certainly must understand, Kay, that I am like other women, that nothing would give me such joy, such happiness, as to feel the little lips of a baby against my breast. But you also must understand, oh, you do understand, do you not, that I cannot have a child now, as much as I would like to do so."

"This time my voice was icy. 'Why not, Sheila? You are young, healthy, rich and have a beautiful home and a devoted husband. You are the kind of a woman that should have many children.'"

"I cannot help but think that you are doing something that I would never have said you could have done. You are shirking—Can it be that you are afraid?"

"Yes, dear Kay, I am afraid—Oh, I am not physically afraid. Women have borne children since the world began and the pain one woman has borne I can bear. But I cannot have my son or my daughter told that his or her mother was proven a criminal and sentenced to prison."

"Nonsense, Sheila," I protested, a great light breaking upon me. "No one would ever remember that. It is all past and gone."

"Is it?" She rushed away to her room and came back and dropped a number of sheets of paper in my lap. Some were typewritten, some were telegrams, and some were scrawled in pencil. All of them told the same story. They asked Sheila Spencer how she had been able to put her conscience to sleep so soundly that she had no remorse over ruining the life of one man and making him a wanderer on the face of this earth and fastening herself to another, well knowing there would come a time when she would be a millstone about his neck.

"As I read I became more and more excited. 'How cruel, how inhumanly cruel all this is.'"

"But that isn't all. I have been called on the telephone and received telegrams with similar sinister messages."

"Surely not at this house, Sheila." "No, they never called me here. But I seldom go to a luncheon or a tea or an afternoon bridge that I am not called to the telephone."

"At first I tried staying home but after I had been called up here twice and had just intercepted a telegram before Phil got it, I saw it was much better for me to be out as much as possible."

"We will put detectives right on this." "No, you must not. Listen to this: 'Don't try to find out who is writing tomorrow—A Terrible Dilemma.'"

"I have not told her that I am writing you, neither have I told her that I am counting back to get you and take you away for I have never loved anyone but you."

"I have not told her that I am writing you, neither have I told her that I am counting back to get you and take you away for I have never loved anyone but you."

"I have not told her that I am writing you, neither have I told her that I am counting back to get you and take you away for I have never loved anyone but you."

"I have not told her that I am writing you, neither have I told her that I am counting back to get you and take you away for I have never loved anyone but you."

these letters. If you do in the next morning's papers there will be a rehash of your entire story. And look at this one.

It was a clipping from a Calcutta newspaper in which there was an account of a man under the influence of drugs being found in one of the sordid haunts of sailors at the water's edge. It read: "It is said that this man is the son of an immensely wealthy merchant prince and that he is well known up and down the whole coast as a confirmed morphine addict. His remittances are always spent for the drug and he lives in the most disreputable and filthy places except for the first three or four days of each month when he gets his check."

At the bottom of this clipping were written the words: "This is your work."

"It is all the conception of a fiend," I gasped, staggered by the diabolical scheme to destroy Sheila. "I do not believe whoever wrote it intends to publish your story because I am sure that if the whole thing were published, no one could be so inhuman as not to pity you, dear girl."

"I am going to take this to the detective," I announced positively.

"Wait, wait, I want you to read my last letter. Doctor Thornton sent this over to me this morning. It was sent to me in care of the hospital."

With a furtive look about, Sheila snatched the missive from the bosom of her dress.

It was postmarked Paris and read: "Dearest Sheila: 'Words cannot express my disappointment. I had thought that when my father died I would be able to come back and make you my wife, but I have just had word from my father's wife that I was absolutely cut off in his will and made absolutely dependent upon her.'"

"She writes that if I never show my face in America she will settle an income of $10,000 a year upon me."

"Darling, I would never have written this letter if Suzanne, dear girl, that she is, had not written that you understood perfectly, that you knew that I could not help leaving the city when I did and I promised I would not write you because only by so doing could I keep you from being arrested."

"She promised me on the night I went away to protect you and when I got her letter of explanation, I just said a little prayer of thanksgiving to Him, who had sent me such a sister."

"From her last letter I find she is in San Francisco but she will be going back home soon."

"I have not told her that I am writing you, neither have I told her that I am counting back to get you and take you away for I have never loved anyone but you."

"I have not told her that I am writing you, neither have I told her that I am counting back to get you and take you away for I have never loved anyone but you."

THRONE LAUDS UMPQUA VALLEY

France has the lily; England the rose, but Douglas county has the prune. This year there will be a yield of about 15,000,000 pounds of prunes in Douglas county, according to J. M. Throne, of Roseburg, registered at the Imperial. "This means that the prunes will bring into the county about $1,250,000," says Mr. Throne, "which gives some idea of the importance of the crop. Many of the producers sold their prunes at 10 cents a pound. However, I am optimistic and haven't sold yet. I am interested in our orchard of 30 acres. The trees in our bottom lands are more productive than those in the Willamette valley. There is one tree on our land which last year produced 27 bushels of prunes, or a matter of 1740 pounds. This makes the tree's yield about $174. This year I expect this same tree to give about 33 bushels, for the tree looks even more heavily loaded than last year. I told one of the leading nursery men in the state that the tree produced 29 bushels of prunes and he frankly declared that he didn't believe me, but
