BETTER HOMES.

More than 500 cities will celebrate Better Homes week from October 9 to 14. Model houses and improved methods of house-keeping and furnishing are being displayed. It is a great subject and better homes mean a more efficient population. An enormous amount of energy has been wasted by poor planning of houses and home equipment. The labors of women have been doubled by placing their working arrangements at long distances from each other. The woman who has her kitchen tools close to the stove and table and sink where she uses them, with her dining room near by, can finish the toils of housework much easier than one who has these facilities widely separated. Modern apartment houses have demonstrated how greatly a woman's labors can be relieved by saving steps. Many women feel that it is about as easy to keep house in such a place without help, as to do so with a servant in a poorly planned house. People who remove their residence and go house hunting, often look through dozens of dwellings and find all inconvenient in some respect. A lot of houses seem to be put up by people who give no practical thought to this question. The home should not merely be an efficient working plant, but it should be designed so that it can be kept in repair at a minimum of expense. Many dwellings put up in former years are loaded with intricate details which require constant painting and must be mended as they show wear. Elaborate interior finish makes labor for the housekeeper and is more expensive to keep in order. The home of the future must study for simple efficiency. A house can be built to save labor and effort, and yet have an artistic touch that makes a dwelling seem like a real home. The house that is queer and ugly will deteriorate in value, but the one that is harmonious and satisfying will sell at a profit.

The cost of living has taken a pause in its downward swing, hesitated a bit, and again shown a tendency to turn upwards, says The Nation's Business. This course of economic events for the housewife is not confined to the United States. The same state of affairs appears to be in prospect for England. The British index number declined a little in July, but the cause has been found in tumbling prices for potatoes. Thereupon, a newspaper remarks that man does not live by potatoes alone, and turns to a more pleasing discussion of the great amount of jam in sight for winter consumption, even with a tax of five cents a pound in force on sugar and the retail price around thirteen cents. Perhaps goaded by the thought of those cheap potatoes, the newspaper eschews any further reference to the index number, and devotes its space to grouse which come at 62 cents apiece, whereas plump imported chickens fetch the same price a pound, and it ends with regrets that a good oyster season is not in sight; for there is a story that the heedless military authorities, having more explosives than they wanted, dropped large quantities into the sea near the oyster beds.

Walter Pierce, democratic candidate for governor, says there is only one issue before the people of Oregon in the present gubernatorial campaign, and that issue is "Taxation." Taxation is everything—all else is as nothing. The long-suffering people of the state will admit that "taxation is everything" and that everything is taxed—to the limit. Now, if Walter can get matters shaped, should he be the successful candidate at the November election, that he will be surrounded by a legislative body of the same mind and character as his own he may be able to get somewhere in the matter of reduction in taxes. It is almost a crime to promise the people of Oregon wholesale reduction in taxes when no man can put it over. He must have the backing of the members of the legislature. Therefore, it is just as important, in fact, more so, that each county in the state send the right sort of timber to the legislature. Men who have the business sagacity to keep within the law when it comes to state expenses.

Astoria—by the sea—is going to take a bath and renovate things generally that the city might become more inviting to criminals and the Chinese population. The grand jury declared the county jail to be in a filthy condition and recommended all the mattresses and bedding be destroyed and the jail renovated. It also declared the courthouse in need of repairs. The report also suggested that the chief of the fire department and the council committee on health and police give special attention to the unsanitary condition in various Chinese houses, pool rooms and soft drink places.

We now have the county court and the city council just about the same opinion in regard to building a bridge across the South Umpqua. We would say that this is shaping things up pretty good at or near the close of 1922. Now let us all get together and put the bridge over. The acquisition of the park grounds offered in lieu of a bridge would be a mighty fine Christmas present to the people of Roseburg—and they would certainly appreciate the gift.

The Oregon national guard has received official notice of a recent war department order announcing that military saluting between officers and enlisted men of the regular army and national guard has been discarded. It took the department a long time to get next to a useless waste of energy.

Has anybody heard anything about Governor Olcott recently? It is about time the present incumbent was making himself known in the fall campaign. To date there are many people who are under the impression that this is a one-man battle.

The Yanks and the Giants are starting off a real world series. This is what makes the game interesting.

Many rural communities are having their advancement retarded by the attitude of their officials toward transient motorists. Abandon the idea that every automobilist is to be milked, mulct and bilked to supply fees for justices and constables and amusement for court loafers. It's a detriment to local business men. Harassing the automobilist drives potential investment away. Every community owes its growth to the outsiders who visit it. Close your town to visitors and you die of dry rot.

In Ye Olden Days

(From Roseburg Review, Jan. 21, 1869.)

Yesterday afternoon while all the members of Judge Willis' family were absent for a few minutes, some one entered his residence and stole a purse containing $7 and $8 more that was lying loose near by. Some time previous to the robbery a big negro hobo was noticed prowling suspiciously about Judge Willis' and T. R. Sheridan's houses and he is probably the guilty party. He came to town the night before with a gang of toughs that succeeded in stealing a ride in spite of the efforts of the train men to keep them off. The fellow probably went south and has not yet been apprehended.

Hon. Sol Abraham visited southern Oregon a few days ago.

Lincoln Wright, an S. P. employee while assisting to place a derelict engine upon the track in the four yards this morning had the four fingers of his right hand badly mashed. Dr. Twitcheil, the company's surgeon dressed the injury.

"Scenery" Too Strong For Faithful Ford

Scott Britt, who operates a filver of the vintage of 1873 that has never failed morning, noon or night, to lift on all four so long as Scott furnished the gasoline and oil has gone "hog wild," according to the owner, and on certain occasions of recent date has absolutely balked at the approach to the Deer creek bridge when traveling north. Mr. Britt has the proud distinction of marketing some of the finest salmon ever hauled in the state from the waters of the North Umpqua and his Lizzie has been a faithful pal until just recently, conveying thousands of pounds of the finny tribes to this city for marketing.

Yesterday afternoon Britt started for Winchester and just before reaching the approach to the bridge his machine slid off to the right, balked, reared on all fours and came very nearly spilling the driver and his load. After getting the filver under control and headed due north on Winchester street he turned off the gas and alighted to ascertain the trouble. Everything looked good to the driver and sped on, but upon his return to Roseburg, and as his car was just leaving the north approach to the bridge, it swerved to the left and almost tore the front end off the Deer Creek barn, Mr. Britt states. Not until the driver's eye fell on the huge sign recently erected near the approach to the bridge was he able to figure out what was the matter with the Ford. Scott says it takes a terrible blow to knock his machine out of its regular course, but the glaring sign was too much for the old reliable and it almost decided to cash in when it met up with the latest wrinkle added to "our city beautiful."

Five Transients Held on Suspicion

Ralph Wolf and James McCormick transients, were arrested this morning by city and railroad officers on suspicion of having been implicated in a clothing store robbery at Albany. Both boys carried a full outfit of clothing bearing the tags of the Albany toggery, and they were unable to explain their possession of these garments satisfactorily. The local police department got in touch with the Albany officials and are endeavoring to obtain more information. Three other boys, Kenneth Kruder, Harold Holbrook and Raymond Hunch are also being held while the officers are endeavoring to determine how they came into possession of certain articles of jewelry found upon them.

Library Fair is Postponed

In order to secure attractions which will add to the success of the Library fair, the committee last night decided to postpone the event until the dates of Oct. 26, 27 and 28. A well attended meeting was held and considerable interest was shown. It was pointed out that other attractions may be secured by waiting until that date and the event can be placed on a much more successful basis and after considerable discussion it was decided to accept these dates. H. W. Strong was appointed to head the selection committee and the appointment of Rev. C. H. Hinton as publicity manager was ratified. It is also decided that because of the full program which has been planned for each evening that only one show will be given and that will take place on Saturday evening. Reports indicate that the community fair for the benefit of the library building fund will be one of the largest events ever held in Roseburg and will be a decided success. It is reported that the same ticket sale is progressing rapidly. Every woman that gives a chance on the big show receives a check in the amount of the person holding the lucky number.
