HABITS OF THE GRAY SQUIRREL

OREGON AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, CORVALLIS, Nov. 13.—A motion picture of natural history depicting the life and habits of the Oregon gray squirrel was recently purchased from H. M. Wight, assistant professor of zoology, by the Kineto Company of America, distributors of the famous "Ditar" natural history pictures. A substantial sum was paid for the picture, part of which goes to Don K. Mercen, recently of the department of industrial arts, who completed all the photography work, reports Professor Wight.

What Happened When Sheila Elliston Refused Love

By Idah McGlone Gibson

The Discovery.

I rushed blindly forward not knowing the import of that sinister remark of the woman beside me.

What work did she mean that the little white pellet had done?

Was Sheila dead or only sleeping?

I hardly dared go to the bed. She looked so white and I could not see that she was breathing.

The same thought came to Phil and Tony, but we were all reassured by the woman saying, "Do not worry. I gave her only a very little morphine. I wanted to help her. And morphine's the only comfort that can be given to a woman after she gets down here."

The tragedy of this assertion was heightened by the matter of fact tone in which the woman made it.

"When I found this girl on the street," Sara continued, "she was talking to herself and calling upon Walter to come and get her out of some sort of trouble. The name Walter was one I had been much interested in for the last few weeks and I tried to talk to her.

"She was bareheaded and I saw she was out of her head.

"When she saw me, she gave a little cry of delight and ran over to me holding out both her hands, saying I am glad you are here. Help me to find Walter. And then she looked around as though she were afraid that someone would come and get her before she found him.

"At first I thought she was the sister of a young man I had been taking care of named Walter. I asked, 'Are you Walter's sister?' She paid no attention to my question, but kept entreating, 'Help me find Walter. Until I find him and he tells Phil the truth, Phil will keep on hating me.' "

"Darling—darling," crooned Phil, kneeling beside the bed and taking Sheila's hands in his.

"Darling," he repeated, covering the little hot hand with kisses, "I never hated you. I have always loved you even when I was made to believe you did not love me."

Sheila for a moment seemed trying to understand. She opened her eyes and looked at him but just as I thought, with bated breath that she was going to recognize my brother she turned her face away with a sigh and questioned: "Won't you help me to find Walter?"

I do not think I will ever again see upon my brother's face such anguish as I did when he realized the Sheila did not know him.

"So that is Sheila, is it?" Sarah whispered. "That is the young lady I heard Walter often speak of. And is that man the one for whom she proved faithless to the boy. Was it because she fell in love with him?" Questions spilled out of the woman's mouth eagerly. I looked up casually and noted with surprise remnants of once great beauty in the woman's face as she bent forward toward me. I saw that she was younger than Sheila. Vice and drugs had multiplied the years.

"He certainly got a raw deal from some one," she commented viciously. "It was too bad that a boy like Walter would have to come down here to find a little kindness from a woman like me. He was too good-too decent for all that. But I do not think that I would have brought that woman up here if I had known she was the Sheila that Walter had loved, the one who had written him the love letter that he always carried."

"Sheila did not write that letter to Walter," I said to the woman rather loudly before I thought.

Phil raised his head from where it had been resting close to Sheila's nerveless hand. He saw a great light. Presently he said:

"Am I to understand, Kay, that the letter Sue showed me from her brother—the letter he wanted her to send Sheila—was in answer to one to which Sheila's name had been forged?"

"Yes, Phil, I would have told you before, but you believed so implicitly in Susanne that it was not the time to make accusations."

Phil's hand stole tenderly to the curling hair about his wife's face. He quickly brought it away, his face alight with hope.

"Her face is damp, Kay. Do you think the fever is broken?"

"Here's a man who can tell you," broke in Tony Soper, and I then realized that Tony had been absent from the room for some time. Good old Tony! It was he who had sense enough to get a doctor.

The doctor went over to the bed and lifted Sheila's drooping eyelids.

"Who gave her the morphine?" he demanded quickly.

"I did, doctor. I picked her up on the street. She was raving with fever. The only thing I had to quiet her was one of these."

She handed him a little pellet.

BELLVIEW CLUB HOLDS MEETING

The Bellview club held their regular meeting Nov. 9, 1922 at the home of Mrs. Fred Boyer. After the business session Mrs. C. E. Hagar gave a very interesting talk on her observations as a delegate to the P. T. A. convention at Eugene, also the drawing for the yoke that had been donated to the club and raffled off for the benefit of the Library fund. A very tidy sum was realized from this and the cooked food sale recently held by the club of which one half of the receipts are to be given to the Library fund.

Dainty refreshments were served by the hostess at the close of a very pleasant afternoon. Those present were: Mesdames Wm. Agnew, C. E. Hagar, W. A. Pearce, J. D. Palm, A. A. Murphy, R. C. Lovelace, G. W. Kincaid, J. O. Arthur, G. W. Parker, J. J. Kesler, P. W. Beckley, Fred Boyer, Edward Boyer, J. H. Short, J. D. Hughes, Miss Hannah Dawson, Miss Mabel Short and Mrs. Eliza Harvey, Mrs. J. Hammond and Miss Ancy visitors.

The next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. P. W. Beckley, Dec. 12. Plans will be made for the Christmas entertainment for the children of the neighborhood, an annual event with the Bellview club.

REPUBLICAN LEADER FEELS GOOD OVER THE ELECTION

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—Retention of republican majorities in both senate and house was declared to be "very gratifying" to republican leaders in a statement issued today by John T. Adams, chairman of the republican national committee reciting some of the causes which he considered responsible for the outcome of Tuesday's election.

The spirit of unrest following after the world war, an unusual prominence of local issues over national issues in many states, the use of "fake" issues to befog the general situation, and the natural tendancy of a large class of people to vote for a change in officers were credited by the party chairman with responsibility for paring down of the republican majorities of two years ago.
