Coast Guard Ready for Winter Perils

(Associated Press)
NEW YORK, Dec. 8.—More than 5,000 officers and men of the United States Coast Guard, assigned to some 270 stations distributed along the coast of Maine to Alaska, have their sea boots and oilskins out this week for the beginning of the annual cruising season, which is ordered each year by the President of the United States. During the cruising season, which last until April 1, upwards of 100 sturdy, sea-going steel vessels, equipped to render any kind of aid to ships in distress, will be ready to depart from their stations on a moment's notice for any point where danger lurks.

Due to the widespread use of wireless on ships of all classes, the last few years have seen radical changes in the Coast Guard cruising program through the severe winter season. Formerly it was the custom to send cutters out on patrol duty for five months, allowing them to make port only to replenish fuel and food supplies.

Now, however, the improved and extended wireless communications have eliminated much of the unnecessary cruising, and rendered the Coast Guard cutters more efficient when in constant touch with their shore stations. During the stormy season, all leaves are suspended, a capacity stock of fuel and food is aboard, and all life-saving equipment is ready for instant use.

The 270 stations along the 10,000 miles of American coast also take on new life in the winter months. The personnel is brought up to a maximum; several hours are devoted to drill each day, and the beach patrol is augmented.

A report of the Coast Guard's activities for 1931 shows that there were but two days during the year which did not bring a call for assistance from some quarter. One day 27 calls were answered.

The duties of the Coast Guard are many and varied. Its most important work, however, consists of rendering assistance to vessels in distress, and taking off the passengers and crews where necessary; destroying or removing derelicts and other dangers to navigation, enforcing the laws relating to quarantine and neutrality; extending medical aid to American vessels engaged in deep-sea fishing; suppression of mullies on merchant vessels; protection of game and the seal and other fisheries in Alaska; and operating as a part of the navy in time of war.

Pardon Pleas Await Pierce

SALEM, Ore., Dec. 6.—One of the earliest pardons through which Walter M. Pierce will have to go when he becomes governor of Oregon will be to listen to appeals for clemency on behalf of four condemned men now in prison awaiting execution for murder.

They are Dan Casey, convicted as the slayer of "Buck" Phillips, Southern Pacific special officer in Portland; Abe Evans, slayer of James Doran in Wasco county; Russell Hecker, slayer of Frank Bowler in Clackamas county, and Husted Walters, who killed Jerome Palmer, a Portland police officer.

A few months ago eight condemned men were awaiting execution, but the state itself has made away with three of them, Elvie D. Kerby, Jack Rathle and George Howard, and the fourth, R. M. Brumfield, committed suicide in his cell.

Of the four remaining Evans and Walters are confined at the state penitentiary, while Hecker and Casey are in the Multnomah county jail. While all four were sentenced to be hanged on specific dates the appeal of all the cases to the supreme court automatically stayed the executions, and at the present time there is no date set for a hanging at the state prison.

Of the four, only Walter's case has been disposed of by the supreme court, that tribunal having upheld the conviction and verdict of the lower court. Since all appeals of capital punishment cases to the supreme court have been futile since the enactment of the capital punishment law in Oregon, there is little hope for the three, whose cases are still pending before the state's highest courts.

Friends and relatives of the condemned men are doubtless pinning their hope to commutation to life imprisonment by the new administration.

Governor Olcott, while not a believer in capital punishment, has been consistent in his policy of refusing to interfere with the expressed will of the people, since no recommendations for clemency in any case have reached him from authorities having to do with the trial. This policy apparently has been the logical one to adopt. While there is a difference in the circumstances of crimes, few men care to assume the individual responsibility of splitting the hairs of discrimination after the states' ablest jurists have passed on the case.

It is apparent now that one or two executions may take place during the session of the legislature. This will be unusual, and will afford some of the state's lawmakers an opportunity to get some first hand information on the administration of an important state law.

Invest For Safety
---Not For Yield
Occasionally invest in us and say: "I have a good money to invest. I depend on the income from my investments for my living. I want a safe return. What is the best return I can get?"
Frequently, however, you come to us and say: "I have a sum of money to invest. I want to get upon the income from my investments for my living. I want a safe return. I must have safety of principal and certainty of income."
That's where the real difference lies—on safety, not on yield. Surely if you invest your money in the comfort and convenience of life, you would rather have a certain income of 50¢, than a uncertain income of $500 at the end of the principal.
Remember there is no safety for Safety.

FARM NEWS

(By County Agent Cooney)
The Importance of proper Handling
The importance of carefully handling the nursery stock cannot be overestimated. Douglas County orchardists plant about 400,000 young fruit trees each year valued at $100,000.
Success with this investment rests in a large way on the care of this stock prior to planting and one year thereafter. Care should be exercised in protecting the stock from getting dry, especially the roots. No tree can have its roots exposed to the air for many hours without weakening the tree to a great extent. Carelessness in this matter will cost the orchardist a large amount of money.
Fall shipments, if they are not to be planted until early spring, should be carefully heeled in the trench with the soil firmly packed about the roots. Very little or no packing materials should be allowed to be placed in the trenches the trees are often damaged by field mice.

Planting the Tree
It is a good policy to not remove more trees from the trench than can be planted in one or two hours. In preparing the tree for planting cut back all broken and bruised parts with a sharp pruning shear or knife. When the tree is in the hole spread out all roots carefully and cover with top soil, then firm the soil with your feet, being careful to leave no air pockets under the roots. Repeat filling the hole and firming the tree until soil level has been reached.
The tree, when finally planted, should not be planted more than one or two inches deeper than it grew in the nursery row. This is important and should be given proper attention. Orchardists planning on new acreage should buy the best stock they can afford and then give it the proper care.
