Chapters from a Woman's Life

By Jane Phelps

Chapter 4. Walter was specially inclined. So we went a good deal and did our part in entertaining. I enjoyed the social life also, but not quite as he did. He was never willing to have a party break up, always insisting it was only the edge of the evening no matter how late it was. I soon learned not to interfere or to speak of the hour. He told me once at one of Claire's parties that I was a killjoy and Grace Harter was with him, adding: "You'll lose your little hubby if you insist upon dragging him home before he's ready. Wait is always the last to leave."

It was the constant repetition of such things that made me learn to dislike her. Yet once when I spoke of it to Walter, he said: "Grace was always a good sport. I like it in a woman. You can sleep as late as you like in the morning, so what's the use of rushing home when I'm having a good time? Then he added: "She looked stunning! Always did know what she could wear. I wish you were a little more original, more artistic in your dress. You look just like nine out of ten women one sees."

"I'm sorry I didn't look nice, Walter. That was a new dress, and an expensive one."

"Expense be damned! I have a model who can wear a piece of calico and look smart and different."

I wasn't artistic, and knew it. But it hurt me just the same to have him compare me with his models to his disadvantage. Someway Walter often hurt me, yet I showed him without intention. If I showed I was hurt he would be sorry, perhaps plan an outing or something. But after the first few weeks he never apologized in words. He hated to admit he had been wrong.

But his invincible qualities so far outnumbered the unlovable ones that I loved him more intensely after we had been married a year than when I was a bride. His merry spirit was infectious—he was just a big overgrown boy.

Father and Mother had spent a few days at holiday time with us and had a royal time. Walter really neglected his beloved work to entertain them. But as yet I had met none of his relatives, although I had received a stilted letter of welcome as her son's wife from his mother. After reading the letter I made up my mind I wouldn't like her. I asked Walter to describe her and tell me all about her.

"She's very dignified. Demeanor, but she's got a good heart. She isn't very well, a lame heart affection, and it makes her a bit hard to get along with at times—that is, it would if one didn't know and love her. She thinks the sun rises and sets in me—don't know as I blame her," he added teasingly.

"I thought her letter rather cold," I explained.

"No, I don't think so. It's the Mater all over. No fuss or saying more than she means. I hope she will come East soon so you can get acquainted."

I made no reply, but I sincerely hoped she would not come East. After that cold, formal letter I had no desire to get acquainted with my mother-in-law.

We were taking what I to myself called one of Walter's "apology outings." We had spent Saturday afternoon up the Hudson, and were on our way home. I noticed a tall graceful blonde sitting opposite us in the Pullman, but was wholly unprepared for Walter's whisper: "Isn't she a beauty?"

"Who?" I asked.

"That girl opposite, the blonde. God, but I'd like to have her for a model. Wonder who she is?"

I glanced at the girl and knew from her expression, her veiled glances at us, that she knew she was our subject of conversation.

"Look at that foot and ankle!" Walter said in a low tone. "Perfect!"

Said foot and ankle, and considerably more, were displayed generously as she crossed her feet on the cushion.

"She evidently thinks so," I replied.

"I must find out who she is," he said, but continued to my sarcasm, but attention staring.

As we went out of the train the blonde was directly in front of us. After we passed through the gate I missed Walter, but in a moment he came running back.

"I heard her give the taxi driver her address!" he exclaimed beaming. "I shall find out who she is, and if possible get her to sit for me. She is a perfect type—a glorious beauty!"

TWO GOOD HIGHWAY JOBS ARE DOOMED

SALEM, Ore., Dec. 19.—Abolishment of the office of state highway engineer now held by Herbert Nunn, and of assistant highway engineer, now filled by Roy Klein, will follow the selection of a paid state highway commission, according to announcement made by legislators here today.

Governor-elect Pierce, in a statement given out in Portland, said that he favored a paid highway commission in order that the incumbents of the three offices may give their entire time to the work of the department. One of these commissioners probably will be assigned to the duties now handled by Mr. Nunn, while another member of the commission will act as secretary in place of Mr. Nunn.

Mr. Nunn receives an annual salary of $7000 and is the highest paid state officer, with the exception of the governor, who commands $7500 a year under a law enacted in the 1921 session of the legislature. Mr. Klein receives $2000 a month.

Rumors reaching the capital today indicated that the members of the commission, if placed upon a salary basis, will not receive to exceed $3000 a year and expenses. The present members of the commission work without compensation other than their actual traveling expenses.

The names of four more prominent Oregon men were mentioned here today in connection with the appointment of new highway commissioners. They include Jack R. McKay, roadmaster for Lane county; James Culver, member of the Marion county court; Howard B. Evans of the Buffalo-Pitts steam roller company of Portland, and George McGee of Hillsboro, who supervised the construction of more than 1000 miles of road in France during the world war.

It also was said here that Asa Robinson, county judge of Polk county, is a candidate for state insurance commissioner.

PASADENA LEGION WILL HAVE A DRUM CORPS

(By United Press.)

PASADENA, Dec. 19.—Jazz, pop, and stirring martial music are in store for Pasadenans in general and for members of the Pasadena Post of the American Legion in particular. The desired effect will be produced by a drum-corps, eighteen drummers—count 'em—which will be organized by the post in the very near future.

The plans for the corps include snappy uniforms and all the varieties of rhythm that eighteen drums beaten in unison can produce. Piles will not be included in the organization so that there will be no

MOVIES

MARY ALDEN IS A REAL "SCREEN MOTHER"

There are mothers, and mothers, and still other mothers. But there really is only one "screen mother" and that is Miss Mary Alden, who will be seen in another—and one of her very best—mother roles in the new Charles Gilpin photoplay production, "A Woman's Woman," which is coming today and Friday to the Liberty Theatre under an Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release.

For a long time and in so many motion pictures has Miss Alden appeared in a mother role that it is only fair to this surpassing screen artist to explain that she is not old, not even middle-aged, but on the contrary is young in years, young in voice and still younger in spirit.

In her face is the typical mother expression always, and her big brown eyes, deep, sensitive and expressive, eyes that bespeak intellect, culture and brooding—hold a world of mother sympathy and easily indicate the reasons for her splendid success in the mother role which is so familiar to the photoplay public.

"Acting is my living," says Miss Alden, "and with kindred things like books and the theatre, my sole interest. I never let myself fall in love or get pessimistic or indulge in scandal. I act, and I find that acting takes up all my time, thought and energy."

"HUMAN HEARTS" IS A STORY OF REAL PEOPLE

"Human Hearts," which comes to the Antlers Theatre tonight, is one of the photoplays that depends upon the oft-neglected factors of a real story and perfect cast for success. The scenic background and other settings are beautiful, but they are kept in the background where they belong. The script is the same as that of the famous old Hal Reid play which was the king of the stage a decade ago. House Peters plays the leading role of Tom Logan with Edith Haller as his leading woman. Both players are prime favorites with the theatre-goers and are ideally cast in their respective parts.

King Baggot, director of the picture, had played the role of Tom Logan in stock many times, and has always declared the play his favorite; hence, when he was chosen to take charge of the production, he used the greatest care in the selection of the cast. Among the favorites playing important roles are Russell Simpson, Gettrude Claiborne, George Hackathorne, George W. West, Loretta Harris, Ramsey Wallace, Mary Phillips, H. S. Karr and Snit Edwards.

STRONG ROLES FOR POPULAR PLAYERS

Marjorie Daw and Kathleen Kirkham have become inseparably identified with Douglas Fairbanks' pictures, because of their having played in all of his current productions.

In his elaborate screen production of "Arizona" by Augustus Thomas, which will be shown at the Majestic Theatre for the last time tonight.

Marjorie Daw plays "Bonita," and Kathleen Kirkham is seen as "Ketrina." Both these parts have been played by famous actresses on the stage and Misses Daw and Kirkham feel highly complimented at being selected to play these roles respectively in the screen production. Mr. Fairbanks plays "Deut. Denton," a part admirably suited to his dashing personality. Theodore Roberts plays "Casby," Frederick Burton, "Colonel Bolham," Frank Campbell "Kellar" and Raymond Hatton as "Tony."
