

Why the "Morning Grouch?"

Many people awake feeling irritable and nervous—and are annoyed at trifles they wouldn't notice at any other time.

This nervous, irritable feeling lasts until after they have had their cup of coffee—sometimes it takes the second cup.

The reason for this is simple; their nerves are crying out for the caffeine contained in the coffee they crave.

And now, if this "strikes home," ask yourself why you should not quit a habit that makes you nervous and irritable.

Be your natural self; try doing without coffee for a week or so—and drink rich, fragrant Postum instead.

Postum is a pure cereal beverage—refreshing and satisfying, yet absolutely free from caffeine or other harmful ingredients.

Postum comes in two forms:—Instant Postum (in tins) prepared instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages, for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared) made by boiling fully twenty minutes.

GLENDALE NEWS

Miss Lillian M. Vandervoort, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dick Vandervoort, of Yoncalla, and Mr. Charles Hall, of this valley were married at Roseburg on Dec. 30th at the parsonage of the M. E. Church, Rev. Gordon, officiating. The bridegroom is at the home of the groom's parents near this city. They will occupy apartments above the Glendale bank in this city. We join many friends and relatives of this popular couple in congratulations.

George Miller left for Portland this morning and will transact business of importance and will return to Douglas County next week. In carefully noting the opinion expressed by the News-Review in regard to the failure of our district attorney to be chosen to fill the position of U. S. District Attorney, we agree with every claim held that George Neuner should have been the appointee. Of his splendid fitness to fill the office there is no doubt. We feel that Douglas County has met a defeat where we had priority rights. We have no word to say in regard to the successful judge who has been named for the office yet we all must admit that as a prosecutor George Neuner has few equals and no superiors. We are surprised that our senators have failed in this instance to keep their political promises. It is prima facie evidence that women must insist on their rights and duties as voters and citizens. Our community was shocked at the awful tragedy that occurred last Friday. So many of our older residents knew the most of the principals in former years, and we all extend sympathy to the bereaved ones. Our better thoughts are terrified at the awful devastation of "moonshine" menacing our state and nation.

CHAPTERS FROM A WOMAN'S LIFE

By Jane Phelps

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING WEEK'S CHAPTERS

Doreen is the wife of Walter Page, an artist, who has a studio away from his home and evinces growing interest in a model who poses for him, Helen Ralstrom.

Page buys a car, allowing Helen to select it. Doreen is hurt. A picnic is planned. George Harter, whose wife was once an "old flame" of Walter's suggests they also invite Miss Ralstrom as there is plenty of room in the Harter car. Walter calls for her. After a pleasant day picnicking Helen takes Doreen's place in Page's runabout, necessitating Doreen's return with the Harters.

Walter's mother, accompanied by her dog, Fido, arrives to make her son a visit. She is a cold, aristocratic type of woman whom Doreen dreads having to entertain.

Chapter 13.

"A dog!" Jennie gasped. "I ain't never cooked and waited on no dog, and I ain't goin' to begin now!"

"Oh, Jennie!" I almost wailed. "I don't like dogs either! I am afraid of them, always have been. But Mr. Page's mother must have things as she wants them while she stays. It won't be long," I added, the wish fathering the words.

"Well, I'll do it for you—but not for her!" Jennie said, but with a frown.

"And, Jennie, please try not to lose your temper before her. I don't know how I should get along without you. You see I don't know Mrs. Page at all. She lives out West and is quite a grand old lady."

"I guess she ain't no grand or yourself," Jennie quickly replied, cleverly reading my fear of my mother-in-law. As I turned away I wondered if I had made a mistake in speaking to her; yet I would be loath to lose her. She was a good servant, a good cook. I knew very well she would not like Mrs. Page, that her supercilious manner, the extra service she would require, would set Jennie against her. So I had spoken.

As we kept but the one servant I had dispensed with many little amenities to save her work and steps. Dinner ready she rang the table bell as usual. Walter and I went into the dining room and waited. Jennie had put the soup on the table and I trembled for fear it would get cold.

"I'll go up for your mother. Perhaps she isn't dressed. I told her to rest," I said to Walter.

In answer to my rap she called: "Come in."

She was sitting stiffly erect in a straight chair, the dog on her lap. "Dinner is waiting," I said. "Perhaps you didn't hear the bell."

"I never pay any attention to bells. While I am with you kindly have the meals announced at my door," Mrs. Page answered, then rose majestically and followed me. Fido still in her arms.

I wanted to tell her to leave him in the room; that I hated a dog in my dining room, but I said nothing.

Jennie's eyes flashed when she saw the dog and even Walter looked surprised. A warning glance from me kept him silent; or it might have been the expression of his mother's face.

"My soup is cold. Please reheat it," the lady said, then turned to Jennie and added: "Never serve the soup until I am at the table. Cold soup spoils my whole meal, and my temper also."

"You should have come when the bell rang," Walter said laughingly.

"If you will stop to think, Walter dear, you will remember my aversion to announcing meals by means of a bell."

"That's so, Mater! I had forgotten. Well, when the rest are busy I'll come to the door and say: 'Dinner is served, Madam!' how will that do?"

I was delighted to hear Walter joke so unconcernedly with his mother. It was very evident he was not afraid of her. But Jennie who had just brought back the soup, giggled.

"Servants should know their place!" Mrs. Page said looking at the girl severely.

"Jennie has a sense of humor," Walter replied as she went into the kitchen. Then: "She's rather spoiled. Mother as we keep only one; and nowadays they have to be handled with gloves or they leave you high and dry I should hate to be without one while you are with us."

I threw him a grateful glance for his tactfulness. He understood and smiled reassuringly. Perhaps, with Walter to aid me, it wouldn't be so hard to entertain his mother after all.

We had steak and as Fido didn't eat any meat except the breast of chicken Walter's mother asked that I keep him supplied. I saw my household bills mounting but I meekly said I would attend to it.

TOMORROW—A visit to the Studio.

FRANCE IS FACING ALCOHOL MENACE

PARIS, Jan. 2.—What France should do with her excess alcohol has become one of the burning industrial and national problems in the republic. While France has no prohibition movement under way, she is seriously troubled by the economic aspect of an excess production of wine, and especially alcohol.

A senate commission reported recently on the problem. It commented on prohibition in the United States; pointed out that France's liquor and wine exports had been reduced by such prohibition, and then made the flat statement that there could be no question as to the desirability in France of reducing the human consumption of alcohol, that alcohol today was a national danger to the republic.

Seeking ways to meet the economic difficulties presented by the actual situation, the commission insisted that the surplus production of alcohol be used as a fuel by mixing it with benzine, gasoline and other like substances in proportions ranging from ten percent up.

It is proposed to run automobiles, locomotives and factories with this mixture, and at the same time save part of the money now spent abroad for coal and other oil fuels. Many experiments have been made, and large prizes offered, for the best mixture.

The principal factors in the alcohol problem are that there is possibly a smaller consumption of alcohol in drinking because of increased prices and that France produces far more alcohol than she can herself normally consume. It is argued that the human consumption of alcohol may be further reduced if better uses for the product are found.

However, it is pointed out that nearly three fourths of France's population gains its livelihood, directly or indirectly through alcohol, whether the people are engaged in agriculture or in commerce.

France, the report shows, is now producing an average of a billion gallons of wine and alcohol yearly, out of which is obtained an annual internal revenue of about a billion francs, with export values of upwards of half a billion francs yearly.

The commission reached the conclusion that one way to reduce drinking would be to increase the taxes on wines and liquors. France has been drinking more and more, for a hundred years, because beverages were cheap. Fifty years ago the daily per capita consumption was one and one half quarts, today it is three quarts.

The final conclusion of the commission is that France's 22,000,000 gallons of pure alcohol, produced from grain, beet sugar and molasses, should be diverted from certain present uses, including human consumption, to general use as a fuel.
