

"Them Days is Gone Forever"

The time when a farmer raised all of his own feed, and most all of his food and clothing. Nobody wants to go back to the days of the hand loom and the toll grist mill, but you can't run your farming business the same as you did then and keep ahead of the game. "You gotta buy gasoline, tires, n' grease." To do that you must buy your farm machinery, fencing, feed, and all the other stuff you produce with at the lowest possible cost.

The smartest business man on earth cannot undersell all competitors all the time, but if he has enough buying power back of him he can keep under their prices enough of the time to make a darned good average.

If you will furnish the amount of business we will furnish the price. It's up to you. Tell your neighbor, and SEE US FIRST; WE CAN SAVE YOU MONEY

Chapter 34

Sitting in the roadster beside Walter, skimming swiftly over the country roads I forgot there was anything unpleasant in the world. I was tired and the bracing air rested me. We talked little, but once in a while Walter would turn to me and in a funny little way he had said:

"Hello, Doreen," then pay attention to his driving. Sometimes he would vary it by asking: "Having a good time, Doreen?" Not waiting for an answer. These little lovable traits in Walter always made me love him more. He seemed so like a great big irresponsible boy.

We stopped at a famous restaurant for our dinner. Henri's knew us and expressed his pleasure at seeing me, saying something complimentary, so tickling Walter's vanity, evidently aroused. We had a wonderful dinner—it was horribly expensive, but I made no objections and lingered long over our cheese and coffee, chatting.

Walter talked a little of the party. Said Grace had "knocked them all out" in my costume, but carried the idea that it was because of my selections not her beauty.

"She told me you wanted to sketch her in it," I said.

"Yes, she's coming tomorrow. Better run in and have tea. She made Helen look like 30 cents in her cheap get up. She's raving over it. Women certainly are cattish."

"Me too!" I asked, happy that he had proposed I come to tea.

"No, Doreen, I think you have less of that in you than any woman I ever knew. It makes you mighty attractive, too."

Is it any wonder I was happy. Suddenly I burst out:

"I'd rather have had this afternoon with you than gone to the party!"

"Good girl!" he patted my hand as it lay on the table.

"I guess we'd better be going," he said after a bit. "The mater will wonder what has become of us."

It was like a douche of cold water. But I threw off the feeling and replied easily:

"I shall tell her that we have been on another honeymoon."

"We'll have to have them often," Walter replied, as we walked out followed by the obsequious Henri.

The ride home in the early evening was delightful. A great sense of peace and happiness stole over me. How foolish I was to allow anything to worry me, when I had my husband's love. I felt I did have it and my cheeks reddened in the dark.

As I thought of my jealousy of Helen Ralston. Nothing mattered but his love for me, mine for him.

"I'll be right back as soon as I put the car up," he said as he helped me out.

Mrs. Page and Claire were sitting cozily in the living room. She had remained to dinner and they were evidently having a pleasant chat.

"How did you find Mrs. Eldredge?" I asked.

"Not quite so well but cheerful as ever," Claire replied. "She was delighted that I brought Mrs. Page."

"And I was charmed with her," Walter's mother added.

"I must tell you what Mrs. Page did. After we left she stopped at the fruitery, and sent my invalid a wonderful basket of fruit, jellies, etc. Then a great bunch of oil-fashioned flowers. I know she was delighted with such thoughtfulness. She is so grateful for any kindness, she thought that prompts it. That means more to her than the gift itself."

"That is the way with all of us I think."

"Where did you and Walter go?" "Jennie said you went away together."

"We went honeymooning!" I said just as Walter appeared.

"That's right, Mater! And we're going often!" he said.

Claire soon left, and before we retired Mrs. Page said:

"My room looked very nicely, Doreen. Thank you for the flowers. I went to bed very happily. Life wasn't so hard after all."

Tomorrow—Doreen Plans a Dinner for Mrs. Page.

ARE MARRIED PEOPLE THINGS DIVINE?

"Married People" the Hugo Ballin-Hodkinson production which shows at the Liberty Theatre for the last time tonight was written by a Chicago stenographer, Nell Marie Dace, who submitted the story under the title of "Things Divine." During the course of production several suggestions were made for a new title, as it was not thought that "Things Divine" suited the story.

One day Mr. Ballin suddenly stopped work and said that he had decided on a title. "What is it?" everyone eagerly asked.

"Married People," said Mr. Ballin. "It's a good title."

Now Mr. Ballin's friends are wondering if he was taking a facetious fling at the conjugal state in thus converting "Things Divine" into "Married People."

GHOSTS IN ARMOR

What kind of ghosts should properly haunt an old Spanish castle in Aragon? That's the question which agitated the mind of Alfred Green, director of "The Ghost Breaker," Wallace Reid's new Paramount starring picture, at the Antlers for the last time tonight.

Should they be ghosts in the familiar white raiment or "in complete steel arrayed" like ghosts in Hamlet. The problem was adequately settled however and the old and crumbling structure in distant Aragon was properly peopled with ancestral thrills. Lila Lee is leading woman and Walter Hiers has a strong comedy part.

COMEDY OF GHOSTS

Dorothy Gish's latest Paramount picture is a ghostly comedy but the supposed ghosts are of the flesh and blood variety. The result is many laughs and in this respect "The Ghost in the Garret" which will be shown at the Maestric theatre tonight is a delightful and bracing gloom chaser.

As the heroine in the story, Miss Gish follows a band of thieves into a reputed haunted house and to achieve her purpose of recovering a stolen necklace, she plays the part of a ghost with weird yet laughable effect. In this work she is aided by a most intelligent build-up whose acting qualities are finely displayed. The story was written by Wells Hastings.

BOOTLEGGING IS NOT GET-RICH QUICK BUSINESS

SPOKANE, Wash., Jan. 25.—The bootlegging business as a "get-rich-quick" scheme is a failure, according to Frank Wright, aged 35, vacuum cleaner salesman, who has been sentenced to 90 days in jail and to pay a fine of $250 and costs.

Wright blames his trouble to accounts he had read of immense profits being made through bringing liquor over the Canadian border. "There wasn't much money in the vacuum cleaner game at that time," he said. "So I decided to take a flyer in booze. I bought a new car and made a trip over the border. Came back empty the first time. Got a big load through safely the second time, but the federal authorities got me the third time and I lost my car, the liquor and a big bond."

"That about cleaned me, so I started in on a small scale. Paid $85 a case for Bourbon and got $100 a case for it by the bottle. Couldn't even make good wages and was about to give it up when the authorities got me this time. I'm cleaner now than any rug I ever demonstrated my cleaner on, and that's going some."

ALTURAS, Cal., Jan. 25.—Another scourge of rabid wolves is feared for Modoc county and adjacent regions. Several coyotes, tame and desperate and fearless by the number, have been sighted at widely separated points, which prompts the belief that a general spread of rabies will ensue.

About three years ago rabid wolves and coyotes became a numerous in this county that people in the fields and on the roads were in constant danger, and several persons were attacked, with fatal results. A coyote in that condition
