A CORRECTION

One of the members interested in the dancing party given in honor of the young people of this city Saturday evening called at the News-Review office today and stated that the dance was not given under the supervision of the high school, but on the contrary was sponsored by the parents and those interested in the pleasures of the young people of the city, many of whom are high school students.

Every married person, living with husband or wife, in order to claim the exemption of $2,500 and $400 for each dependent minor allowed in the federal income tax law, must make a return although his actual net income for 1932 may have been only $2,000, according to Clyde G. Huntley, collector of internal revenue. These returns must be filed not later than March 15, 1933, or the delinquent taxpayer will be liable to heavy penalties provided in the law for failure to do so.

CHAPTERS FROM A WOMAN'S LIFE

By Jane Phelps

Chapter 38.

Jennie had been gone but a few moments, and I was standing at the window, when I saw a taxi stop at the curb. Mrs. Page alighted and following her was a tall, lanky woman carrying a rusty black bag. She had kept her word, had brought a maid with her.

"This is Mary Fagan. I have hired her. Mary, this is Mrs. Page, my son's wife. She will show you your room, and the kitchen."

"Come this way," I said quietly, noting the sour-faced middle-aged woman, so different from Jennie.

I showed her her room, told her to leave her bag, then led the way to the kitchen.

"You will find enough in the ice-box for luncheon," I said. "We have it promptly at one." I walked out of the kitchen.

"She had good references?" I asked Mrs. Page.

"Excellent. I read them carefully."

"Did you call any of the people she had worked for to verify them?"

"There was no need," she replied stiffly. "Aside from her written references, I am a good reader of character. You will find her a good servant, I am sure."

"I sincerely hope so, I should hate to have the remainder of your visit spoiled by another poor servant. Jennie left this morning."

"At one o'clock the bell rang. Mrs. Page put her hands over her ears.

"Why, yes, I did forget. Yet if she is a perfect servant, as you claim, should it have been necessary?"

"We'll excuse it this time; but please do not let it happen again," she replied, following me into the dining room.

"Mary, Mrs. Page doesn't like a bell rung to announce a meal is ready. Hereafter you will come to the door of the room where we are and say: "Madame, dinner (or luncheon) is served."

"Not me!" Mary's arm akimbo, hands resting on hips. "If you want to put on style you'll have to have more'n one girl."

I bit my lips to keep back a smile and looked inquiringly at my mother-in-law.

"I'll talk to you after luncheon," she said to Mary.

The luncheon was well cooked but she had given us only what was practically ready—had broiled the chops and made a salad. But we invariably, since Mrs. Page's advent, had either toast or hot biscuits of some sort for luncheon. She never ate cold bread. There was no desert, Jennie always fixed something simple, a custard, or a hot gingerbread for us.

"Bring us a jar of jam," I told Mary when she informed me she had nothing more. But Mrs. Page declared she didn't care for it, and I meekly followed her from the room.

Dinner was better. But her sour face caused Walter to say it took away his appetite and ask where Jennie was.

"Your mother insisted I discharge her. She was very kind and found Mary," I said in a pleasant voice.

"Oh, well! I suppose I don't know anything about such things, but I'd rather have Jennie's good natured face around and less to eat, than that cross looking creature. I'll bet she has a temper. Better keep away from her, Doreen. She's bigger than you," he joked in his careless way.

"I noticed the bell for dinner and wondered what it meant."

"Oh, I'll keep out of her way all right! Mrs. Page is going to caution her about the bell."

"I'll bet she drinks!" he said to me when we were alone.

"I hope she does," I replied, and although he was curious, I made no explanation.

"Mary has consented to announce the meals," Mrs. Page said with a self-satisfied air, as she joined us. "It's all in management, Doreen. Not being accustomed to servants, naturally you fall in knowing how to handle them."

Tomorrow—A Disorganized Household.

RECITAL GIVEN BY MISSIONARY SOCIETY

The recital given by the Woman's Missionary Society at the Presbyterian church last night proved a delightful event, although, owing to so many other attractions in the city that evening, the attendance was not so large as was hoped for. The musical selections and readings were all given by home talent, some of the best vocalists in the city appearing on the program. The solos of Mrs. Charles Brand, Mr. Harold Bennis, Mrs. Fred Strand, were particularly well received. The violin and piano selection by Mr. Roise and Mrs. L. B. Moore was something unusually good, and they were recalled, as, indeed, were many of the other performers. Miss Hazel James played in her usual faultless manner, her selections being one by Rachmaninoff, and Miss Elise Robinson charmingly rendered a composition by Godard.

The readings by Mrs. Hodges and Mrs. Ashcraft received much applause. The program was concluded with a vocal selection by C. H. Arundel. The accompanists for the evening were Mrs. Arthur Knauss, and Miss Jean McKenzie. Mrs. Helen G. Smick, Mrs. Franklin A. Bemis and Mrs. Albert C. Chamberlin constituted the program committee, and are entitled to no little credit for so successfully arranging for this excellent recital. The special recitation by Miss Geddes was especially fine.

MOVIES

LON CHANEY IN GRIPPING PLAY

"Flesh and Blood" is an out-of-the-ordinary story. It jolts the heart and thrills the system. And certainly it is different in its portrayal. Lon Chaney seems to that. A story of a man who lost the world and regained it by forgiving his enemy. He realized that he could not stand in the way of his daughter's happiness. Hence he returned to the prison, grateful that he had looked upon her fair beauty and found her smiling with love. Truth revealed itself to him in a startling manner. It is this truth so visualized as to make this picture a real achievement in the annals of screen production. It is melodrama! It is even more, for it comes mighty close to human nature. You see the cross-currents of life flowing in different directions and marvel over the ways of the heart. It teaches that life is worth while even though shut in by prison walls. At Liberty theatre last time tonight.

"UNDER TWO FLAGS" AT THE ANTILLES IS SPECTACULAR

Matching Priscilla Dean's dynamic personality and masculine punch in emotionalism, James Kirkwood, with his manly virility, and John Davidson, with his cool suavity, provide excellent foils for the star of "Under Two Flags," the Universal Jewel spectacle adapted from Quida's famous romance at the Antilles for the last time tonight. For a secondary female role Ethel Grey Terry, an artist of the highest standing, was engaged. Tod Browning directed Miss Dean in "Under Two Flags," and it is said they have outdistanced their mutual success. "Outside the Law," a sensation of the past.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS IN NEW ENVIRONMENT

In his forthcoming picture of "Mr. Fix-It," Douglas Fairbanks appears in a new environment, which is rendered delightful by exquisite settings, beautiful girls, interesting children and a compelling theme. This photo comedy is entitled "Mr. Fix-It," and in the leading character, which he portrays, he has a congenial role that will prove a source of great delight to his admirers. It shows at the Majestic tonight. The scenes are located in the slums and in an aristocratic home of wealth in New York.

GLIDE NOTES

The student body of the Glide high school, gave an interesting entertainment and box social Saturday evening, January 27. Although the severe weather prevented the usual large crowds from attending, $85.25 was realized from the sale of the boxes. This money is to be used for various student body activities for the balance of the school year.

Miss Edna Stone spent the week end visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Blakely.

Mr. F. C. Larreau, who has been quite ill, is able to be out again.

Miss Ruthella Heninger, and Miss Ruth Edwards of Oakland, were guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Watson, this week end.

Abe Wilson, who has moved down from Illinois for the winter brought word that there was two feet of snow at Fish Creek Desert.

Mrs. Frank Baptiste returned to her home at Glide, January 29, after an extended visit in San Francisco, with relatives and friends.

Thursday afternoon a delegation consisting of six members of the Glide high school, accompanied by the principal, Mrs. Layton, will leave by auto for Eugene to attend the state convention of associated student body presidents and secretaries. The party will also include Miss Florence Casbeer, editor and Miss Ella Vaughn, associate editor, of the Glide high school paper, who will be in attendance at the state convention of high school editors.

RUNAWAY CAR CAUGHT

Charlie Lockwood, driving his fastest Lincoln, finally overhauled the flivver running "hog wild" with Roswell Mineral Water for its power, just as it was crossing the line near Vancouver, B. C. The flivver had lost every squeak, was full of pep and "rarin' to go." Charlie has wired Ford to drop Muscle Shoals and take an option on Roswell Mineral springs at any cost. (Why do flivvers invariably start toward Vancouver?)

$30 GROWS TO $2,000,000

MUSKOGEE, Okla., Jan. 29.—Harry Hill, an electrical engineer, learned today that he was the sole heir to the estate of his uncle, John M. Hill, merchant of Nashville, Tenn. Hill said the estate was valued at approximately $2,000,000.

The estate grew, Hill asserted, from a stock investment of $30 in 1874. Dividends had been reinvested and all proved successful.

COOPERATIVE MARKETING SWEEPING OVER COUNTRY

"The cooperative marketing movement is sweeping the whole country from the Atlantic to the Pacific," said C. J. Hurd, market specialist of the O. A. C. Extension service on returning from the National Cooperative council at Washington. "More than a million and a half farmers were represented when the council met, and 15,000 names were wired in from the cotton growers association alone while the council was in session."

A state-wide cooperative marketing educational campaign has been agreed on by the 12 organization members composing the Oregon Cooperative council which met in Salem January 17. This will carry the idea into every community in the state.

The purposes, methods and results of cooperative selling will be explained by extension specialists. Local arrangements and other assistance will be given by the representatives of the council.

The state grange, farmers union, farm bureau, bankers association, agricultural committee of the Portland chamber of commerce, the state college extension service and bureau of markets, and the five state-wide commodity marketing associations are back of the movement. The five associations are growers of grain, fruit, wool, poultry and hay.

Governor Pierce approves the plan, and asked the council to name a committee to help draft a market master bill for enactment at this session of the legislature.

"Bill" Hanley of Oregon, president of the State chamber of commerce, said he is greatly impressed with the work already accomplished and is in favor of extending it.

W. B. D. Dodson, manager of the Portland chamber of commerce, was reported as saying that the big $200,000 development plan would not be a complete success until every farmer has an opportunity to market cooperatively.
