SLEEPING SICKNESS REPORTED IN STATE

At the present time influenza is a mild form is prevalent throughout the state and the state board of health asks co-operation in the reporting of cases. When influenza becomes prevalent there appears also an increase in the number of cases of "sleeping sickness" or encephalitis lethargica. Several deaths from this disease have occurred in the state since the first of the year. Encephalitis, however, is not caused by nor is it a complication of influenza. There is no scientific background for linking the two diseases together. There is a seasonal variation for both influenza and encephalitis; both diseases reaching the crest during the winter months. This fact has led to an erroneous conclusion regarding the cause of encephalitis.

Acute epidemic encephalitis is not a new disease. During the past six years there has been an increase in the number of cases of the disease reported. The disease is due to a filterable virus found in the central nervous system and in the secretions from the nasopharynx. The disease is transmissible and is slightly contagious. By inoculating the nasal mucosa of rabbits and guinea pigs with infected secretions from a human case, the disease can be transmitted. Negative results were obtained with inoculations of the normal nasal mucosa, but the results were rendered positive by chilling the nasal mucosa, and thus destroying its normal resistance against the penetration of the encephalitic virus.

Diligent care should be exercised in disinfecting the secretions from the nose and throat of those suffering from the disease. All eating utensils should be sterilized after use and all particles of food left by the patient should be destroyed. Those caring for patients suffering from the disease should see that they have no inflammatory process of the nose and throat that might serve as a favorable site for the penetration of the virus. The precautions for the prevention of influenza and encephalitis are identical.

For the treatment of the disease a specific serum has been prepared at the Mayo foundation. This serum can be had in limited quantities by applying to the state board of health, 391 Fitzpatrick building, Portland.

Other contagious diseases reported for the week ending January 27, 1923: Smallpox—Bend, 4; Portland, 4; Salem, 1; Clackamas county, 2; Multnomah county, 1; Clatsop county, 1; Corvallis, 1; Klamath Falls, 1; Portland, 3; Klamath county, 2; Lane county, 2; Malheur county, 1; Wallowa county, 1; Bighornia—Portland, 17; Salem, 1; Marion county, 1; Washington county, 1.

CHAPTERS FROM A WOMAN'S LIFE

By Jane Phelps

Chapter 29.

Consistently I followed the line I had mapped out for myself. I did the marketing, cared for my own room, and the living room, saw that we had flowers for the table—something Mrs. Page insisted upon—then let Mary do the rest. She was a good cook, but was always grumbling about something, and wouldn't let Fido in the kitchen, unless he was in Mrs. Page's arms. I could not see that she served any better than Jennie did, but I made no comments.

"One afternoon—she had been with us about a week—Mrs. Page and I had been out returning calls and until almost dinner time. Before we laid off our wraps Walter came in. We chatted, expecting every moment to hear dinner announced. Finally he said:

"I'm hungry as a bear! 'What's the matter with the dinner?' he started from the room, only to return in a moment, his eyes dancing, and said: 'Come along you two! Here's something that will amuse you.'

We followed him into the kitchen. There sprawled on the room was Mary, the room smelling of whisky.

"She's drunk," Walter said, attempting to make her get up, while I grabbed the potatoes off the stove as they started to burn. I knew she drank, Walter. I told you so the first day." Walter loved to prove himself right.

But he did not know that when she drank she was ugly. She wanted to fight when he set her up and I was afraid she'd hurt him; she was as tall as he and strong. It was simply disgraceful! Finally he got her into her room.

When she sobers a little out she goes!" he said, coming back to us. The potatoes were spoiled, the roast chicken scorched, the table wasn't laid.

"You'll have to take us out, Walter," I said.

"Right you are! When we come back I'll throw that girl out bag and baggage."

I enjoyed my dinner hugely, but

Mrs. Page's discomfiture more. Walter was as good as his word. Upon our return he marched Mary off, she threatening vengeance.

After Mrs. Page had retired I inspected my kitchen. Soiled pans under the sink, the pantry in disorder, the ice box needing attention. I took everything out of the latter and left it open. Then I too went to bed. Mrs. Page could see how neat her paragon was in the morning.

"I wouldn't have believed it," she said. "Her references were irreproachable."

"Will you find another maid?" I asked.

"Of course! There were several looking for work. I'll go at once." I knew she was glad to escape from the dirty kitchen.

To condense the doings of the next two weeks. We had no less than five maids, all of her choosing. One stole, another was impudent, all were incompetent and careless. Every single one objected to Fido and to Mrs. Page coming into the kitchen.

Finally she said:

"Try your luck, Doreen."

I went out and telephoned Jennie. She came in quietly and no one saw her until her broad good-natured face appeared announcing: "Dinner is served."

"Come here, Jennie! I want to hug you!" Walter cried, while she blushing and giggling fled.

I had to hire a woman for a day to help Jennie clean. But it was worth it. Neither I nor Mrs. Page ever referred to her return, nor to the experience we had that two weeks. But Walter would not let it drop. For days he annoyed his mother by telling her she was a "poor picker" and kindred expressions.

The house was running smoothly again, and Jennie said:

"I don't know what you done, but she's been almost decent to me since I come back."

"Never mind, Jennie. It turned out all right, just as I thought it would."

AMENDMENT MADE TO BEALS' BILL

SALEM, Feb. 1.—Affirmative oral testimony must be given to the effect that the same spouse was not the cause of his mate's insanity when an effort is being made to secure a divorce on the grounds of insanity, is one provision which the house judiciary committee has put into Representative Beals' bill which provides a method for being freed from an insane person.

At present there is no law permitting a divorce on the grounds of insanity. Beals endeavored to secure a divorce covering a specific instance by legislative act, but withdrew that bill when objections arose to it, and is endeavoring to make the law general. The judiciary committee is trying to safeguard it.

The bill as amended by committee will provide that service of summons must be filed on brothers, sisters, children, the mother and father and other close relatives to the insane party, and jurisdiction will lie only when the insane person is an inmate of an Oregon state insane hospital. It is probable the only objector to the bill in committee will be Representative Metcalf of Multnomah.

Frank A. Terry of the Equitable Savings and Loan Association will be at the Hotel Umpqua for a few days for the benefit of anyone desiring to make appointments.

CALL FOR SCHOOL WARRANTS

All warrants issued by Union High School No. 2, of Glendale, are now due and payable, and interest will cease after the 2nd of Feb., also warrants No. 12, 35 and 36 of District No. 12, Glendale, Jan. 20, 1923.

CHAMBERLAIN TO TRY FOR SENATE

expected to put an end to the raciality.

Already the friends of Chamberlain, realizing that he will be compelled to meet the issue, are arguing that Mr. Chamberlain has worked long hours since he took the position on the shipping board, and that he has done all in his power to bring to light the thieving that had been done. They insist that Chamberlain from the first realized that a scandal was sure to break sooner or later, and for that reason he did all in his power to force action. But the agents engaged by the shipping board dawdled, while the secret servers were gathering facts that it is said will likely send more than 100 prominent citizens to prison.

But even these supporters of Chamberlain, who insist that he will be able to come back in Oregon politics, admit that the former senator has the right of his life on his hands. They also admit that his advanced age and physical condition will make it impossible for him to make the strenuous campaign of former days. What they count on most is a split in the republican party over the fight for the party nomination. It is now an assured fact that McNary will be opposed in the primaries by a candidate favored by the Oregon Federation of Patriotic societies, and that the contest will be bitter and determined. To begin with McNary came in Oregon and campaigned Ocleot over the protest of the societies; a few weeks later he absented himself from the senate when the nomination of Pierce Butler was up for confirmation as a member of the United States supreme court, and later turned the societies down cold when they asked that he delay the confirmation of Judge Coke as United States district attorney until Ocleot was out of office.

All of which makes it certain that the campaign for United States senator, already on for the 1924 election, will be a humdinger.

Will Back Pierce's Policies.

It is now known that the republican elements that left the party and elected Pierce governor will back the new governor in his fight before the legislature. The governor has formally approved the Hall consolidation bill and the McMahon income tax bill, the latter of which provides that a state income tax shall be levied in the same form as the government tax and shall be in amount just one-half of the government tax.

Men will be sent to the legislature to advise the members of the stand of the republicans who left their party and caused the election of a democrat. They will tell the members that they thoroughly agree with the Pierce program and will ask the individual members to forego their personal preferences and as far as possible give the governor the legislation that he asks.

Leaders from Portland who have already been about the state house take the position that they are prepared to back the governor to the limit, and that they expect the two bills mentioned will go through without further trouble. Anyway they promise to be on the ground for the next three weeks and do their best to back up the man they put into office. They insist that Mr. Pierce did not call upon them for assistance, but that he has formally welcomed them as backers, just as he did during the campaign.

Coo-Coo Revolt Sticks.
On January 7 representatives of thirty local klans of the Ku Klux Klan met in Salem and repudiated the leadership of Fred L. Gifford, the grand dragon of Oregon. They wired to the Imperial headquarters that they would refuse to pay further dues unless Gifford was removed from office.

A powerful effort has since been made to bring these thirty klans back into the fold, but they refuse to make a change in their views, and are daily expecting an order barring them from further affiliation with the Invisible empire. If that comes all plans are laid to turn the klans into Orange lodges.

Those who have made a study of the situation and have traveled over the state to bring about this result, are of the opinion that this revolt spells the end of the influence of the Klan in Oregon. They say that the dictatorship of Gifford has proved disastrous, and that Gifford will be admittedly out of the running politically long before the 1924 campaign.

Gifford still has the hearty support of the Portland and Astoria klans, but the revolting bodies represent almost half of the Oregon membership. The delay in the arrival of the order excommunicating the revolters leads some to the belief that the Imperial headquarters are really considering the transfer of Gifford to California and the placing of the grand dragon of that state in charge of Oregon. But this is mere guesswork.

On the inside it is known that the revolt was promoted by men sent out from Portland, and that these men are close to the Oregon Federation of Patriotic Societies. It has been known to all who have studied the matter that the societies as a body deplored the appearance of the Klan in Oregon politics, and more particularly deplored the leadership of Gifford. All of which makes it evident that there is still a determination to eliminate Gifford for all time. As he is a fighter of no mean ability he is expected to make things lively, and rumor has it that already he has reached a working compact with the McNary supporters.

Legislature Is Very Slow.
