

Why so many women are now finding Mayonnaise easy to prepare

THOUSANDS of women everywhere have found that, by using Mazola, they can easily and readily prepare a rich, creamy mayonnaise, equal to anything you get, even in the finest hotels.

Mazola blends so perfectly with all your other salad ingredients that it brings out the fullest flavor and most perfect taste. And inasmuch as Mazola thickens more quickly, you save time and money. Mazola-Mayonnaise remains always firm, fresh and smooth. It keeps longer without separating or getting rancid.

You can be sure of the purity of Mazola-Mayonnaise, and of its wholesomeness. For you know that the eggs you use in it are absolutely fresh.

Use the Mazola you have, or get a can from your grocer, and try the recipe given here. See how easy it is to make!

Your grocer sells Mazola, in pint, quart, half-gallon and gallon sterilized tins, packed on our own premises, under expert supervision. It is never sold in bottles or in bulk, as are ordinary salad oils.

If you are not entirely satisfied with Mazola, your grocer will refund your money.

Try This Mayonnaise Dressing Recipe

1 cup Mazola
1/2 teaspoon Salt
3 tablespoons Lemon Juice or Vinegar
1 Egg Yolk
1/2 teaspoon Sugar
1/2 teaspoon Paprika

Add well mixed seasoning to egg, with one teaspoon lemon juice or vinegar, and beat well, adding one teaspoon Mazola at a time until mixture thickens, after which the Mazola may be added more rapidly. Thin with lemon juice or vinegar when necessary.

EDDY SCHOOL BILL IS SAFE

SALEM, Feb. 6.—Senator Eddy yesterday made a successful fight for his bill which would require a more thorough teaching of fundamentals in the high schools, the fight taking up more than an hour and a half in the afternoon.

It came up on a divided educational committee report, a minority, composed of Clark, Klepper and Edwards against it, and a majority, composed of Dunn, Garland, Tooez and Brown, recommending passage. After a long debate that was divided by the noon recess, Senator Tooez proposed amendments to the measure. These were offered by his moving that the minority report be made a recommendation that the bill pass as amended, and inasmuch as the amendments were satisfactory to Eddy and his supporters, the minority report in that shape was adopted, so that the bill goes to third reading.

Tooez's amendment made the study of physiology and hygiene alternatives with bookkeeping, and made the bill include the facts of music and art along with the natural and physical sciences. Another amendment by Tooez made the effective date September 1, 1924. In its original form an effective date was left out of the measure.

Prior to this termination of the battle the debate was long and hot. Senator Eddy making a forceful speech of an hour just before the noon adjournment. Eddy in his plea scored Professor Scott Nearing, Jack London and other socialist writers whose books are required as collateral reading by the present course of study. Nearing, he said, had been suspended by the University of Pennsylvania because of disloyalty during the war. Klepper argued that the high students should be allowed to read these writers. Senator Ellis spoke against the bill. Senator Garland lauded the educators of the state as patriotic.

CHAPTERS FROM A WOMAN'S LIFE

CHAPTER 44

"He made some little suggestions. I shall think over," Walter said. "But in the main I shall follow my own conception. You shall have a new fur coat next winter if things turn out as I think they will." When he had money, he was recklessly generous. It seemed to burn his fingers until he spent it—often for me, the house, or in giving his friends pleasure. Money as money meant nothing to him.

"What's it for if not to spend?" he asked. "It's the making it that's fun! Accomplishing what you set out to do."

Evidently he had said something to his mother concerning my being too closely confined, because she sent me out for a walk in the afternoon. She did it rather as if she grudged it, but I pretended not to notice and thanked her for her thoughtfulness. When I was ready and had arranged everything for her comfort, I told Jennie to listen for her bell. I leaned over the invalid chair in which I had placed her and dropped a light kiss on her hair. She said nothing until I reached the door. Then she remarked in a different tone.

"Don't hurry. I shall do very well until you get back."

Happily I walked toward the studio. I would stop in a moment, then run in to see Claire. Helen was resting when I arrived, Walter standing before his picture, in a deep study.

"Did Walter tell you what a wonderful time we had last night?" Helen asked. "I never saw such a gorgeous moon. I would not have been back yet had I had my way."

"So Walter said," I replied caustically. "But people who work have to sleep."

"Just as if I didn't work!" she pouted. Then: "I think it is my duty to tell you that he flirted abominably with Grace Harter. Lovers once, I understand, are usually susceptible to the same influence when it is exerted, especially in such surroundings."

"Thank you, but he told me all about it."

"Bully man! Yet I have heard that a seeming confidence often prevents suspicion."

How I hated her horrid speeches, always hinting—little digs that left one quivering.

"A seeming one, perhaps," I returned with emphasis. "Real confidence never has that effect."

"Hello, Doreen! Excuse my not speaking before but I was trying to fix something in the foreground. You'll have that fur coat sure as shooting."

"Fur coat?" Helen queried.

"Yes, this picture is going to buy Doreen the best fur coat I can find."

Walter answered.

"If it is a success I think I deserve one too," she pouted, giving Walter a look for which I could have slapped her.

"Who knows but you will get one also," he bantered.

I didn't for a moment think he meant it—at least that he meant to give her one, yet my pleasure in his thought for me was gone. I remained only a few moments more, then went on to Claire's scolding myself for feeling as I did, yet unable to help it.

"That girl takes all the joy out of life for me one way or another," I said to myself as I walked slowly away from the studio. "I wish the old picture was finished."

Claire was at home and seemed so glad to see me. She chatted so gaily that I recovered my spirits, and when I reached home I was able to say honestly that I had enjoyed my little outing. Then I entertained Mrs. Page by repeating Claire's chatter.

"I think you must go out every day now," she said. "I am much better and there is no need for you to remain in so constantly." That she welcomed the gossip, I liked to hear what people had to say, may have in part influenced her attitude but if it did I allowed no suspicion of it to appear in my manner. We were almost on friendly terms. It wouldn't be my fault if we did not remain so.

Tomorrow—Mrs. Page Gives Doreen A Present.

Which would you use, a 41-gauge shotgun or a power rifle? If you want lower prices on what you buy and higher prices on what you sell, will you get quicker by shopping round by yourself with a pocket order of a carload at most, or a few hundred bushels of grain to sell, or by concentrating your power in big buying contracts and big selling lots, and doing business with yourself?

That is what you do when you trade through Exchange. You put your buying and selling power together with your neighbor's, and get better prices. We can prove this to you.

ten, including Mr. Erickson. Music occupied the attention of the smaller group until the merry makers were quietly assembled on the lawn, when Mr. Erickson was called to the door and his friends rushed upon him.

For the second time recently the surprisers took possession of the Marsh home. One week ago a party gathered honoring with a birthday surprise Miss Greta Barager, primary teacher in the public school, who is domiciled with the Marshes for the winter.

Music and games filled the time until a late hour, when refreshments were served and the guests departed leaving a wealth of good wishes for Mr. Erickson as he goes forth.

Mr. Erickson is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Erickson who have resided in Looking Glass Valley for about ten years, and he has won a secure place in the love and esteem of the valley.
