GRAVE OF HAWAII'S GREATEST KING KNOWN TO THREE PEOPLE

HONOLULU, T. H., Mar. 1.—The last resting place of Kamehameha I, Hawaii's first and greatest king, is known to three persons and the location was not a secret that perished with the death of the attendants at the monarch's funeral rites, as popularly believed, Frederick W. Beckley, Hawaiian historian, told the Hawaiian Historical society at its last meeting here.

Kamehameha, a warrior chief of the island of Hawaii, was the first to conquer all of the islands in the group. He united them into a kingdom with himself as monarch. According to the popular legend his body was secreted after death and the attendants were sworn never to reveal the location. Kamehameha died in 1819 at the age of 83 years.

"I myself have seen the place where Kamehameha's bones lie," Beckley told the society. "There are two other persons living today who know his last resting place. These are an old Hawaiian, in the federal service here, and an aged Hawaiian woman on the windward side of the island of Oahu. This information has been handed down through my family to the oldest son. It is a sacred trust of honor and is not to be revealed. The common supposition that Kamehameha's remains were moved by King Kalakaua is false. Those were the bones of a lesser chief."

Beckley's statement, which aroused great interest, followed the reading of a paper on "The Passing of Kamehameha the Great," by Dr. W. D. Westervelt, authority on Hawaiian legends and history.

According to Westervelt, Kamehameha was the first Hawaiian chief who refused to permit the sacrifice of a human being in an attempt to save the chief's life. When relatives and retainers attempted to sacrifice a man to propitiate the gods to spare the king's life, Kamehameha forbade them saying, "The man belongs to the chief."

Westervelt said that Kamehameha's last words were "E na i wale no oukou i kuu pono." (The right which I have done ye cannot undo.)

FARMERS TOLD TO FEED POTATOES TO COWS.

MOSCOW, Ida., March 1.—Farmers could receive greater returns from their potato crops, under conditions such as are prevailing this season, by feeding them to dairy cows than they could by attempting to market them, Prof. F. W. Atkinson, of the University of Idaho, believes.

In a recent address before the Moscow Chamber of Commerce, Professor Atkinson told of one farmer in this vicinity who has a herd of 10 dairy cows and who receives a monthly cream check averaging $150.

ONE BUSINESS ENOUGH IF IT'S MOONSHINING

EUGENE, March 1.—When a man goes into the moonshine manufacturing business it is wise for him to confine his infractions of the law entirely to that endeavor, according to G. O. Whitley, a recent Lane county arrival from Texas, who is now serving a term in the county jail for the unlawful manufacture of liquor. Whitley is also of the opinion that it would be wise for moonshiners to efface their names from boxes in which moonshine outfits are received.

Whitley recently spent a few months up the coast, east of Cottage Grove. He professed to be on a trapping expedition. According to police officers, soon after his arrival there, a number of articles were missed from a neighbor's ranch. Up-

The Long Talked of Trip.

Chapter 63.

We were really going south, just Walter and me. I was so excited I could scarcely eat or sleep. His allegorical picture was finished, he would not begin another until after our return. I was having lots of lovely new clothes, he choosing the colors, a very good modest making them. His mother had been more than kind, going with me for my fittings taking as much interest in them as if I were her own daughter.

She added many little things I felt we could not afford, although I objected.

"Walter will have all I have some day," she said. "And if I enjoy spending a little now for his wife I think you should allow me the pleasure without objecting."

It was harshly said but I knew, by this time, that she often adopted that tone when she was hurt so I said nothing more but accepted her gifts without trying to hide the pleasure they gave me.

It was nice to go away feeling so happy and at ease about Jack.

Mrs. Page had been right, I should not have felt I could go away for even the short month we intended to be gone if I had to leave my darling boy with servants, hired nurses only, to look after him. But Mrs. Page knew much more about babies than I did, and she loved him so devotedly she would be even more sure of his proper care perhaps than I, in my inexperience, knew how to be.

"You'll be sure to let us know if he becomes ill?" I begged.

"Certainly. Unless you hear from me you may know everything is going well," she responded coolly.

The studio was closed. Walter had not been with Helen Radstrom for several days, baby would be well cared for, I hadn't a care in the world! So I told myself as Walter and I boarded the train for Washington our first stopping place. I never had been to the capital and he would spend two days introducing me, Walter said.

I cautioned Jennie and the cook. While I was away Mrs. Page was mistress. Her orders must be obeyed no matter what they were. They both promised to be good, and not allow themselves to be angered by anything that happened. Claire Gordon had promised to run in often on discovery of the robbery, one of the neighbor's boys made a search of Whitley's place. Among other things he discovered a complete distilling outfit in operation. Further search revealed the box in which the outfit had arrived. Whitley's name was on the box.

Whitley had not been suspected of moonshining, and the officers say he probably would not have been molested had he confined his lawlessness to that line alone.

GOOD VOICE NOT NEEDED

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—Famous divas were used today by Arthur Hammerstein to illustrate his theory on the ratio existing between personality and bank accounts.

"Mary Garden has about the worst voice now on the stage," declared Mr. Hammerstein, "but she has personality and she has been one of the greatest hits in opera ever since my father signed her up many years ago."

"Calverley came to America, the most beautiful of women, with a gorgeous figure. But she had no personality and so she was singing for $300 a night, while Mary Garden got $2500."

and Walter had found a safe man to drive the car for his mother.

"I don't think we've forgotten a single thing to make it easy for her while we are away," I said as I settled comfortably in my Pullman chair.

"No, and now forget them all! Just make believe this is our wedding trip," he laughingly replied. Then added: "I shall miss that little rascal, Jack."

It was my turn to laugh, telling me to forget them all and in the next breath saying he would miss Jack.

It was dark when we arrived at Washington but after we had dinner I coaxed Walter to take a walk just to the White House. I declared I wouldn't sleep a wink unless I saw the place where our presidents lived.

There was a pale moon and the White House stood out plainly. I was delighted and chatted so about its beauty, its stateliness, that Walter told me I would wake the president up, that the guard would arrest me for disturbing the peace if I didn't keep still.

The two days fairly flew. We "night-seed" every minute and even then I wasn't satisfied, and declared I was coming again so I could see everything we had missed. The capital, the library, the public buildings intrigued me, the beautiful homes, the famous circles, around which they were grouped, the drive through Rock Creek park, and Arlington. I was tired, but such a happy tired. While Walter declared he would send me traveling alone if I was taking that means to get rid of him.

"No more man can stand it!" he declared. "I never saw such a fiend for sight-seeing. No wonder Cook's tourists are mostly women. A man would either die from overwork, or commit suicide in self protection." But as in the next breath he offered to show me something else, his grumbling annoyed me not at all.

He had been wonderfully attentive, it was almost like a wedding trip and I told him so.

"Why shouldn't it be?" he laughingly replied. "I'm 20. You are just 19. Anyway we act like it."

Tomorrow—Walter is gay at Hot Springs.

Messrs. Leo Moore and John Shields, farmers from the country east of Oakland, motored to Roseburg this morning, arriving here before eight o'clock. They spent the day looking after business interests. They left their ranches before daylight and the more than twenty-mile drive was pretty cool at that early hour. But then you can never tell at what hour a farmer will get busy in the morning when there is anything to do.

HOW MANY DUCKS

IS TOO MANY DUCKS

PORTLAND, March 1.—(United Press)—How many ducks is too many ducks?

The Portland city park commission says 400.

This number of waddlers infests Laurelhurst park lake, and during the winter months draw upon the city for sustenance. They wiggle a wicked bill—collectively speaking, boast a capacious crop, and the meal checks come high.

The city asked the state game commission if, for the sake of the freezing taxpayers, it could not gently effect the demise of the "four hundred." The game commission said "so."

"For," averred Captain Burdick, the game commissioner, "they are wild."

One cannot kill wild ducks out of season. The city does not possess the right of eminent domain over ducks. When the open season is in force the ducks scratch for their own living, and nobody wants to kill them. So the city continues to be the goat for the ducks.

Ask any Portlander, preferably one unfamiliar with the names in the social register, who and what is Portland's "four hundred." It's dollars to doughnuts he'll answer, "Why, those ducks out on the lake—the ones they can't kill, y'know."

SUCH A THING AS TOO MUCH LOYALTY

LOS ANGELES, March 1.—(United Press)—The philosophy of loyalty may be all right in its place, but there's such a thing as carrying it too far, thinks L. A. Rose, charged with forgery, who was brought to his present plight and his location in the city jail by the loyalty of a devoted friend.

Deputy Sheriff Stensland and Dewar were hunting for Rose and went to his room to arrest him. Rose was out but his dog was "at home" and whined to be released.

The officers released the pup and then followed close on his heels as he sped sniffing down the stairs, out the front door, and up the street for three blocks, finally turning in at a pool room.

When the dog leaped affectionately on one of the pool players the officers made the arrest.

"The pup's too bright," says Rose.

It's Neuritis! Not Rheumatism

That sharp, stabbing pain in the upper arm, about the shoulder blade, in the space of the neck, along the forearm or down the thigh and leg, is often Neuritis—not Rheumatism.

If you have severe frontal headache with a feeling that something is switching or pulling at the eyeballs—a dull, aching pain in the back, accompanied by an occasional shooting pain in the side—numbness or tingling in the fingers or "stitches" of pain here and there, the chances are that your trouble is Neuritis.

No matter where your pain is located, you can get prompt relief without taking bromides, narcotics or other dope. Apply Tyamol over the part that hurts, and you will be rid of the torture. Tyamol is guaranteed harmless. It helps to soothe and heal the weak, inflamed nerves.

Don't suffer any longer. Get a $1 package of Tyamol Absorbent from W. F. Chapman, druggist, Tyamol Co., Mfg. Chemists, 400 Sutter St., San Francisco.
