CHAPTER 75

Until Walter's mother returned I did not leave the house unless Jack went with me. Walter and Grace both laughed at me, said nothing could happen again, but I was uneasy. Not that I feared Helen Ralstrom would try the same thing again; but I was obsessed with the idea she might try something else.

Walter had only half finished a picture for which she was posing or I should have asked him to discharge her, never let her pose for him again. He might have refused me, but I couldn't ask him to let her go now, and have all his work go for nothing.

Mrs. Page had enjoyed her visit with her old friends and was in good humor. She had ceased to grieve openly over Fido, although she occasionally mentioned him. Mary had gone with her, so I had no fear she would hear about Helen Ralstrom taking Jack to ride. Had it not been for poor distressed Jennie, I should have been inclined to tell her, but I knew Walter was right, that she would insist upon her leaving if she knew.

I had not been near the studio since the incident. I wouldn't take Jack where Helen was. But the day after Mrs. Page's return I dropped in.

"You didn't answer my note," Helen pouted.

"I didn't see any necessity," I replied.

"Now don't you two quarrel," Walter interrupted. "My work isn't going well today, and I'm nervous as a cat."

"I have no intention of quarreling with Miss Ralstrom," I said.

"Why don't you call me Helen?" she asked. "Miss Ralstrom is so formal."

"I call only intimate friends by their first names," I replied, then turned to Walter and talked to him. She looked angry, but said nothing. When I left, however, before the door quite closed after me I heard her say:

"Now perhaps we can get to work again! Your wife is certainly a kill-joy." I waited hoping to hear Walter say something kind about me or correct her for her criticism. But he made no answer and I left.

She had called me a "kill-joy" a word often on Walter's lips if I opposed any of his plans for a good time. Was I?

Someway in thinking of that I forgot Helen Ralstrom. Was I really not sympathetic enough with my fun-loving husband? I knew he was just a big overgrown boy-man when I married him. I knew he was temperamental. Had I failed him because of my disposition, my ideas? I loved him, that he knew, but was love enough? Enough for him? He needed understanding as well as love, had I always given it to him?

I had hidden my jealousy, had smiled over his affairs when I wanted to cry; but had I let him see that I really understood his boyish longing for relief from his work, his desire for play? He worked steadily for weeks when interested, then when a picture was finished he seemed to long to throw care to the winds; to play as hard as he had worked.

No, to be a loving wife was not enough, I decided. I must also be an understanding wife. I would try from now on to be just that.

Full of my new resolution I listened to his plans for giving another studio party when his picture was finished.

"We must think of some way to make it unique," I said and his quick, pleased glance showed his appreciation.

"You bet we must!" he said. "None of your poky cut and dried affairs for me."

We were alone. His mother frequently objected to his studio parties, telling him he was a grown man, that he should be more conventional in his ways of entertaining. Usually she ended by blaming me.

"If you would object, Doreen, he wouldn't act so much like a spoiled boy," she said.

"He'll always be a boy in some things, Mrs. Page. And I am glad of it. And you are mistaken. If I objected he would only do the same things, leaving me out. I have learned not to object."

"I think you are wrong, but you won't of course believe a mother-in-law knows anything."

It was seldom now that she spoke in this manner, but when she did it never failed to hurt me for days. I had tried so hard to put my own wishes aside; to make her home with us happy, that her disparaging words invariably left a sting.

tional work in education at the University.

Douglas county grade and high school teachers will receive soon full details of the summer session.

Other prominent instructors who will be on the summer school faculty are: Dr. Joseph Schafer, director of the Wisconsin Historical Society and well known for his work in American and Pacific coast history; Dr. Charles H. Whitman, of Rutgers college, a writer and authority on English; Dr. O. J. Johnson, St. Paul school psychologist, and Dr. Charles Wendell David, Bryn Mawr college.

Eight visiting professors will be on the staff of the Portland summer session of the University of Oregon. The Portland session is scheduled for June 25 to August 3. Fifty-five courses in all will be offered by a faculty of 26.

Classes in education at the Portland session will be conducted by O. C. Pratt, superintendent of Spokane city schools, and Dr. Ira Richardson, late president of Maryville Teachers' college, Mo., and now associate professor of education in the University Extension Division.

(International News Service.)

LIMA, Ohio, March 21.—"Petting parties, tea hounds and cake eaters still exist in Lima, but the flapper is gone," declared Miss Ruth Seymour, general secretary of the Y. W. C. A. here.

"I have asked the flappers why petting parties go on, and they tell me: 'Oh, there is nothing to do and nothing to talk about.' When they look about them and see the actions of some older women they think they are justified in their petting. The flapper was a reaction from too stern repression. They were sweet, high-spirited girls, but had too little principle."

Miss Seymour condemned promiscuous kissing as destroying the moral fibre of the young women of the nation, and deplored conditions which permit young girls to be blase at sixteen and bored with life at twenty.

RICKENBACKER SAYS THAT AIR TRANSPORTATION OUGHT TO BE NURTURED BY THE U. S.

(International News Service.)

CHICAGO, March 21.—Aviation is the industry and mode of transportation of the future and must be developed by the United States before Europe reaps the harvest which he declares it will bring, Eddie Rickenbacker, premier "ace" of the World War, told members of the Chicago Association of Commerce on a recent visit here.

"Never before has America been in a better position to conquer the commerce of the world," Rickenbacker said, "and laxity in assisting commercial aviation will be deeply regretted."

Results of observations gained in a ten weeks' survey of conditions in Europe lead Rickenbacker to favor a loan to Germany. With this money, he said, Germany would pay the allies and they in turn would repay their loans to us.

FISHERMEN ARE AFTER STATE BOARD

ASTORIA, Or., March 19.—Removal of the entire state board of fish commissioners and Carl D. Shoemaker, master fish warden, will be demanded by the Columbia River Fishermen's League at its next meeting on April 3, Alex J. Somppi, secretary of the league, declared today.

"The reason for this is the secrecy maintained by the board in the conduct of public business and the many discriminations by the board and the master fish warden against the fishermen," said Mr. Somppi. "We have even been unable to find out why the board discharged R. E. Clanton, supervisor of fish hatcheries, the only answer to our inquiries being that the matter will be aired in due time.

"The fish hatchies, belong to the people and not to the board. The fishermen have contributed a considerable sum each year for the maintenance of the hatcheries in order that the work of propagating the salmon might be carried on, and we think that when any radical change is being made in the conduct of those hatcheries the public has a right to know just what is being done."

Mr. Clanton was here today. He said the notice of dismissal came as a surprise to him, as he had no previous intimation that the commission had planned to dispense with his services.

Ouster Surprise to Clanton.

"The notice was a short one and merely said my services would not be needed after April 1," said Mr. Clanton. "I understand the statement has been made that I was not operating the hatcheries according to the ideas of the commissioners. That is news to me as the commission has never made any such intimations to me. I want to know the real reason for my discharge, and I think not only I, but the general public as well, have a right to know."

Mr. Clanton intimated that later he may have some comment to make which will be interesting to the public.

The action of the commission has caused considerable comment in this section where the fisheries are among the leading industries. Members of the fishermen's league are bitter in their denunciation of the commission's act.

MODERN INDIAN BONES ARE A DISAPPOINTMENT TO HUNTERS OF OLD PRIMAEVAL RELICS

(International News Service.)

JOPLIN, Mo., March 21.—Archeologists who toiled in the tomb of Tutankhamen need not fear that their discoveries are to be displaced in interest and historical value by the relics removed from Ozark Cliff, near Noel, Mo., 40 miles south of here.

Investigators searching for North American Indian relics found bits of bones which were decayed too much for identification. Being the time for explorations, however, a group of investigators for the Heye Museum, New York, worked feverishly in the cliff on the theory that this country was inhabited by a prehistoric race known as the Nahua.

The relics unearthed however, dated back only 300 or 400 years and led to the belief that the spot was inhabited by an Indian tribe and later used as a burial ground. Specimens of flint and bone taken from the spot are being supplied to various Eastern museums.
