PHILIPPINE EXPORTS INCREASE BUT EXPORTS SHOW DECLINE

MANILA, P. I., March 29.—Exports from the Philippine Islands to the United States in 1922 exceeded those of 1921 by more than $12,500,000, but the imports from the United States decreased approximately $26,000,000, according to figures just compiled by the Bureau of Customs.

The total trade with the United States in 1922 amounted to $111,849,000, of which $64,116,000 was exports and $47,733,000 was imports. The total trade in 1921 was $124,486,000, the exports being $59,256,000 and the imports $74,230,000.

British ships carried the largest portion of the total trade of the Philippines in 1922, their cargoes being valued at $67,786,000, while American ships carried goods valued at $92,000,000.

CHAPTERS FROM A WOMAN'S LIFE

By Jane Phelps

CHAPTER II.

Vashti Vernon's portrait had been begun. She had the red velvet gown made by a famous modist and Walter was delighted. She was to wear jewelry, not even her pearls, although she had wanted to wear them. But Walter, as usual, had his way. Her heavy, black hair was drawn softly back from her face and knotted low in her neck. When I dropped into the studio during a sitting, her loveliness made me gasp. In spite of myself I spoke enthusiastically about the effect, and Walter was as pleased as a child.

"You see what it is to have an appreciative wife!" he said to Miss Vernon. And at dinner that night he praised me to his mother. It took as little to make him good-humored as it did to anger and annoy him.

If only I could always be pleased with him, but often, very often I was not. I would become quiet, unsympathetic. This, with one of his dispositions, was almost as bad as quarreling.

"I must also drop in to see you at work," his mother said. "Of course I'm proud of your success. She would be a very unnatural wife were she not."

That we had been talking of a person, the very beginning of a portrait, hot of his success as an artist, seemed to have evaporated.

It had taken me a long time to understand how the amicable interchange of ideas and opinions, even though opposite ones, should be considered "arguing" and "contradicting" by Walter. Yet his mother was much like him in this respect.

When she made a statement, even a remark, she hinted to be told she had overstepped the measure of the person talking. So I took no pains to let her right.

I was proud of Walter's success, immensely proud. And if at times that pride was clouded because of his actions it was still there, a very vital thing. I was proud of his good looks also and of his popularity. But pride doesn't always make one insensible to other things, those that sound, that it takes all the faith and trust one possesses to bear and—hide the wound.

As far as our living went we now had no reason for especial economy. Walter was making money, and his mother paid more than she had ever for her expenses. More than I wanted her to. Although when I spoke of it to Walter he only laughed at me and said:

"Let the Mater blow all the money

she wants to, see what she does with it." But although he was doing well, Walter was, at times, recklessly extravagant. A rug would take his fancy and he would buy it regardless of cost, or whether we needed it or not. And so it was with many other things for both house and studio. When I expostulated he would say:

"We'll be a long time dead, Doreen! Let's enjoy life while we can. And I like to see lovely things around me. I feel starved if I can't have them. I know I'm sometimes extravagant, but when I see a rug or vase or picture, design and coloring I can't get away until I buy it."

"But it is such a waste of money, dear, when we don't need the things, haven't a place for them."

"It's my money, isn't it?" That question usually ended our talks on economy. It was his money. He worked hard to get it. But it worried me that we saved nothing. We paid our bills with promissory on the first of each month but when that was done we never had but a few dollars left, perhaps not that.

I knew Walter's mother had money, but she was not really old, probably would live many years. Then I was ambitious for Jack, to do for him myself, not depend on her. Something might happen to her investments, and I wanted my boy to have all that we could give him in the way of education and so forth.

Yet I was almost as helpless in this matter as many other things. Walter laughed at me, called me "stupid Doreen" and if I managed to save a little he found some use for it. I didn't worry as a person would who was starved for money, or who was really poor. But my New England bringing up made waste and unnecessary expenditures seem almost wicked.

When we were first married his studio had been quite simply fitted up. Now it was really a delightful place, and had cost him a great deal. With Vashti Vernon's coming he had added several new things; spending a great share of what he would get for her portrait for new hangings, wonderful in texture and coloring, a rug and so on.

I knew he did this to give pleasure to himself, yet doing it simultaneously with Vashti appearing for sittings gave me a little heartache. She would be all the more lovely against the background he had provided—and more adoring.

Tomorrow—Walter and Miss Vernon file.

LEGION MEETS TUESDAY

Umpqua Post of the Legion meets next Tuesday night and all members are not urged but ordered to be in attendance. A happy time with no oratory is promised and some important business will be discussed. The annual show is the next order of business. Let's talk it over Tuesday night. The barracks crowd'll be there. Come up! ORDER OF COMMANDER.

NEWS FROM GREEN

Mrs. Harry Oakley returned from a short trip to Albany on Tuesday evening.

Raymond Claypool is recovering from an attack of flu.

The hot lunches will be discontinued this week at the Green school, the hot days make the children more anxious for cold drinks. The splendid record of serving at two cents per child a day is certainly very encouraging, and much credit is due the president of the P. T. A., Mrs. John Howard for her untiring effort in maintaining it could be done, and doing it.

Rev. Gordon talked from the text found in Job 24 and the first part of the 14th verse, on Sunday, Mr. Leeper, Mr. and Mrs. Pierce accompanied him, and Mrs. Pierce sang "In the Garden" to the delight of the audience. We will be glad to have another song or two any time. Miss Ruby sang "Anywhere With Jesus" and we are sorry she is to leave her home at Kirby this week.

The committee on the decorations for Easter are planning a very suggestive arrangement for the day. The "Loyal Legends" will have the opening and closing prayers, the reading of the Easter lesson, and the comments on it. The "Truth Seekers" plan a part. The "Bible" will assist, and both the adult Bible classes will help make the program a success, and a tribute to the King. Devotion for a "Victory" life will be made. Come and see what we are doing in the S. S. It is for everybody, and we want to help you if we can, not for ourselves but for eternity. A number of very excellent musical numbers will be given. Genealogy will be with us. If anyone having flowers or potted plants for decorations for the day, will bring them to us, we will be so glad. S. S. will begin at 1:45 sharp, do not forget. Rev. Quick will be with us for the sermon.

FARMERS' SUCCESS SETS NATION'S PACE. WALLACE DECLARES

(By Associated Press)

WASHINGTON, March 29.—The urgent need for a better understanding between the important groups of citizens engaged in agriculture, in industry, and in general business is forcefully pointed out by Henry C. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, in a statement discussing their relationship.

"As our civilization becomes more complex," he declares, "the relationship between agriculture, industry and general business becomes more and more intimate. What hurts the one will certainly hurt the others. In general, what helps one will help the others. They must work together for the common good."

"There has always been a tacit recognition of our national dependence upon agriculture. We have given an intellectual assent to such statements as 'The farmer is the backbone of the Nation.' A prospective Nation depends upon a prosperous agriculture. 'Agriculture is the basis of national life, and so on. The truth of such statements has never been driven home so effectively as during the last two years."

The drop in prices which began early in 1920 is familiar history. Farmers were the first to suffer and suffered most. Taking prices of 1913 as representing 100, the prices of farm products in May, 1920, stood at 238. During that month they began to fall, and before the decline could be arrested they had dropped below 100 in 1921 level, standing at 94 in December, 1921. Then we had a terribly vivid illustration of our dependence upon agriculture and the intimate relationship between agricultural prosperity and business prosperity. Many farmers could not pay current expenses. The ratio between prices of things the farmers produced and sold and prices of the things they bought was so distorted that they were forced to practice the most rigid economy and reduce their buying to absolute necessities. Great industries which depend directly upon farm buying were plunged almost immediately into profound depression. Thousands of manufacturing plants had a similar experience. The railroads suffered through reduction in freight on things farmers buy. Business of every sort shaped the disaster. Hundreds of banks failed. Thousands of banks tottered along the edge of bankruptcy. Perhaps three million men were thrown out of work. The financial depression was wide spread.

"The turn was reached in the winter of 1921-22, since which time there has been a gradual increase in the prices of farm products. Gradually farmers have been able to pay some of their debts and resume their buying. As a result there has been a steady improvement in business, until there is general optimism. The ratio between prices of farm products and prices of other commodities is still abnormal, until this ratio becomes more nearly normal the fall measure of prosperity will not be restored.

"While the experience of the last three years has brought sharply to our attention the intimate relationship between business and agriculture, the existence of such intimate relationship is no new thing. A comparison of the farmer's purchasing power with business failures during the last third of a century tells the story in a graphic way. During the 30 years 1890 to 1900 the purchasing power of the farmer was below the 50 year average; the percentage of business failures was considerably above. From 1900 to 1920 there was a gradual increase in the farmer's purchasing power. From 1901 to 1908 this purchasing power was almost the average of the 30 year period, while from 1908 to 1920 it was considerably above. The percentage of business failures dropped below the 30 year average from 1890 to 1920 with the exception of two short periods, one in 1908, and the other in 1914 and 1915.

"We have about 6,500,000 farms. More than one-fourth of all our people who are engaged in useful occupations work on the farms. The capital invested in farming is about 20 billion dollars. The money invested in farm buildings, machinery and live stock, and including the value of the farm land, would buy all of the railroads in the United States and in addition a considerable number of the mines."

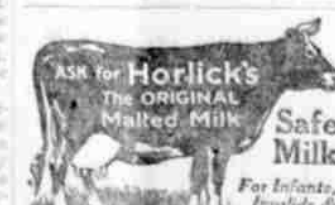

"The number of people engaged in farming is 50 per cent greater now than in 1870, but the volume of crop production in 1920 was 250 per cent greater than in 1870.

"Business and agriculture are dependent upon one another. A prosperous agriculture means a prosperous nation. It is to the advantage of the business man that the farmer be fairly prosperous. Conversely it is to the advantage of the farmer that business be fairly prosperous. It is not to the advantage of either that either the one or the other should be so prosperous that it brings about speculation and waste is stimulated, because misery always follows such a time."
