CHAPTERS FROM A WOMAN'S LIFE

By JANE PHELPS

CHAPTER 94

Mother worried a good deal about me. I had little appetite for the duties, former favorite dishes she prepared for me. I slept badly, and looked gaunt and pale.

"You mustn't lose your good looks, Doreen," Father said jokingly. "That artist husband of yours thinks a lot of beauty."

"It would be hard to lose what I never had," I replied lightly.

"You have your share, and when your eyes are bright and your cheeks red you have more than most folks. But I don't like to see you look so peaked."

Dear old father! How shocked he would be when he knew.

Walter wrote me an occasional short note. Under other circumstances I would have thought nothing of this, knowing what a poor correspondent he was, now it seemed deliberate neglect. It would perhaps take time he wanted to give to Vaskil Vernon. Mrs. Patsy had written me all sorts of warnings as to his care. I didn't show the letter to mother. It looked as if Mrs. Patsy did not think us capable of caring for my boy. She had written almost as if Jack were her son, not mine, and it aroused my indignation.

Also it brought a new and unwelcome thought—she would fight that Walter keep Jack, which would mean, she would keep him. But I knew Walter would not side with her in this, his sense of fairness would prevent.

Three weeks had passed and yet I was not ready with an answer to my problem not satisfied that I could give Walter up even to make him happy. Yet to feel I was a drag upon him, that when he was kind it was from a sense of duty, that if he cared me he wished it were another—could I bear that?

A week more had gone by. I decided then I made arrangements to return. I would wait no word as to when I would arrive, would slip in quietly—perhaps go to the studio and talk to Walter there. It had occurred to me to write him but there was so much to say—too much to say on paper.

"You are still troubled, Doreen. I wish you felt you could confide in me," mother said. "Perhaps I might help you."

"No one can help me," I gave her the same words often on my lips when alone.

"God can, my dear. Ask him."

"I made no reply, but 'out even He can' was my thought."

I was in a fever all that long journey home. My cheeks burned, my hands were hot and dry, my heart thumped violently. But just as we drew into the station I became utterly calm. I attended to my luggage, called a taxi, and with Jack beside me was hurrying toward my home, toward Walter.

Mrs. Patsy was out when I reached the house and after speaking to Jennie, telling her to care for Jack, I freshened up a little and started for the studio. It possible I would have my talk with Walter at once, before my courage left me. Courage that had come so suddenly as I neared home.

He might not be at the studio. It was getting late. At the thought I shivered. He must be there!

Then when I reached the building I couldn't go in. I turned and walked rapidly away, around the block.

It was not that I had changed my mind, not even that I had lost my courage. It was simply stage fright. I walked slowly, aimlessly. A poor boy stopped me, asking him some money, asked him a few questions. Then an old woman halted in front of me afraid to cross the street because of the traffic. I helped her over. As they will when in imminent peril, foolish thoughts came into my mind. Jack needed some new shoes. I must get them on the morrow. Other trifling things occurred to me, and when I finally stood before the studio building, I went in without hesitating, took the elevator, and quietly walked into the studio.

Tomorrow—An Enlightening Conversation.

MOVIES

Comedian Discusses Character.

"Fruits of Faith" contains the most successful character I've ever played in pictures—a tramp!" declared Will Rogers, in discussing his role in "Fruits of Faith," the Pathe comedy which will be seen today and tomorrow at the Liberty Theatre.

"I don't say this egotistically," he continued, "but I don't think there's any man who can play a tramp so well as the screen has better than I can. And if this picture don't go over with audiences, I'll be any the reason I play a tramp is because I have to change my clothes. Another thing, when we made 'Fruits of Faith' we wanted to be sure of having some natural acting, so we got a lady and a money, with which no actor can compete on the screen."

Will Rogers really demonstrated that he can put over pathos as well as comedy in "Fruits of Faith," as there are a number of scenes which are decidedly sympathetic. But as Larry, the tramp, he also furnished some of the funniest comedy moments that have been registered on the screen this year.

"CAPPY HICKS" IS SUCCESS.

One of the strongest and most delightful pictures in which Theodor Neighan, the well known Paramount star, has been seen this season is "Cappy Hicks," which was shown at the Maltese Theatre last night. Neighan is seen as a seaman in the story which is colorful, dramatic and at times quite thrilling. It is a dramatization of Peter H. Kyn's stories of the same title.

Matt Pessley, a sailor's mate, falls in love with Florrie, daughter of Cappy Hicks, owner of a fleet of vessels, and the latter objects to the match. The story takes one to the South Seas and every scene following the murder of Matt's captain, his threatening of a burly Swede and his triumphant return home to Florrie, is filled with genuine drama. The action is rapid and the love appeal most charming. Agnes Ayres has the leading feminine role while Charles Abbe gives an artistic portrayal of Cappy.

"The Pride of Palomar" At Antlers.

A thrilling struggle of a gritty young American against almost insuperable odds is the keynote of "The Pride of Palomar," a Paramount picture which shows at the Antlers tonight. The theme of the picture, which was adapted from Peter H. Kyn's novel of the same name, is a powerful one and woven into the story is a delightful love thread. This involves on the part of the girl great sacrifice, for she is cast between the two persons who loves most in the world, who are fighting one another. There are her father and her sweetheart, and it is absorbing to see how she solves her problem. There is plenty of lively action and a large splash of humor near the end when Don Mike stages a stunt against the enemy that leaves the spectator gasping in astonishment at the audacity of it. Frank Borzage, director of "Humoresque," produced the picture, which is a Cosmopolitan production, an idea that has been little to be derided. Noted stars are Marjorie, Gwynne and the featured players, and included in the cast are Joseph Dowling, James Berrow, Warner Oland and other capable players.
