ROSEBURG WINS DEBATE AT EUGENE

The Roseburg high school debating team defeated the Coos River high school debating team at Eugene last night, 4 to 2 voting. The question debated was, "Resolved that the United States government should adopt a policy of ship subsidies." Roseburg debated the negative side of the argument. Paul Trueblood and Paul Geddes composed the Roseburg team, and were accompanied to Eugene by Mr. Wolfe of the high school faculty, even. This debate is the first of a series of inter-district debates and the next will be between Roseburg and the winning team of the Ashland-Klamath Valley debate held at Ashland last night.

Low Cost—Comfortable Motoring

This Buick four cylinder, five passenger touring car affords dependable, comfortable motoring for every occasion.

Improvements in the design of both the chassis and the famous Buick Valve-in-Head engine have contributed further to the well known black qualities of dependability and economy. Improvements in equipment have provided comfort in the open air. But approximate these found in much more expensive closed cars.

For instance, with the Buick diagonal storm curtains, reinforced by the block weather strip, closed car coziness in bad weather has been clearly approximated. A signal pocket for the driver, complete instrument board, transmission lock and many other conveniences are features every motorist appreciates.

CHAPTERS FROM A WOMAN'S LIFE

By JANE PHELPS

CHAPTER 96.
Mrs. Pace seemed glad to see me, was glad in her inquiries after my people. But it seemed my happiness was too great to bear when she said:

"I think now that Jack is getting such a big pay, and I live with you, that I should like to have you call me 'mother' forever. I have missed you, my daughter."

"Oh, may I have always wanted to?" I exclaimed.

That night I laid awake trying to realize the wonderful happiness that was mine. How could I ever have thought I could give it up? And Walter loved me. Cared nothing for anyone else. Some day I would perhaps tell him I had overheard what Yvette Vernon had said, that I had overheard it, and ask him what she meant. But not until a long time had passed, and never again would I doubt my husband's love. I knew, only too well, that he would often distract me. With his nature that was inevitable, but never again would I let anything make me lose faith in him.

We had both been excited and I had not noticed how worn and tired my husband looked until the morning. Then I spoke of it.

I guess it partly because I imagined you, too, but before you left I told rather rotter. I wanted Yvette to sit for another picture and she refused. Told me we were neither of us strong enough to go on without a rest, that I did all right now we were back." He took me in his arms and kissed me. While I

So that was what Miss Vernon meant when she said they were neither of them strong enough. How everything was being cleared up, all my doubts and fears dispelled. How unnecessarily I had suffered.

You and Walter take a run down to Atlantic City over the week end," Mrs. Pace said at breakfast. "Walter looks steady. He missed you terribly. Doreen, although I did my best to fill your place, but I imagine we are too much alike in disposition to be restful for each other. It will be my treat and don't stint yourselves in any way."

Just the thing! What do you say, dear?"

"I should love it!" I replied wondering if my heart would not break with happiness, as I had believed it would with sorrow.

"When we come back, Doreen," Walter said in his boyish way. "I guess you'd better join that Civic Purity League. I've been going to the meetings with the Master and am converted."

How like him! He would stop at nothing while in his present mood to please me, and later, when he was in another frame of mind, I would remember and not feel. I would remember he was an atheist that he could not be judged as other men are judged in many ways that his extravagance his love of beauty, his peculiar temperament, his tasteless sexual levityness, must all be considered. Surely my love—that I had thought strong enough to enable me to give him up to him could be—was strong enough to make allowances now that I was sure of his love.

I wrote mother from Atlantic City, told her the trouble I had spoken of had been all adjusted, that Mrs. Pace had asked me to call her mother, and that I was the happiest girl in the world. My letter must have read like a poem of thankfulness, for which she replied she said:

"I was sure my dear that everything would help you that everything would come out all right. Trust Him always, dear."

As I took back at the years that have passed, chapters in my life that seemed so filled with vital interest to me, I wonder if after all they are so different, save in incident, from what happens in the life of other women? We marry full of youth, hope, and a self-centered idea that the world was made for our happiness. We find those instead of those, we experience disappointments and see how neither the faith nor the unselfishness in surround them to know that here lies opportunity in service, not in demands. That here means faith and trust, not doubt.

Then comes the time when, realizing all these things we adjust ourselves and meet another, a taller, finer, more dignified, that makes for a purer happiness, a fuller life for ourselves and for those we love.

And if the retelling of my experiences suffering in those early years of my married life help even one woman to a greater faith and trust, I shall not feel I have transcribed those chapters in my own life to vain.
