NEWS OF HAPPY VALLEY AND VICINITY

The Parent Teachers Association of the school held a very interesting meeting Friday evening at the school house. A large attendance was present and the program was very much appreciated.

A large warehouse, 30 by 100 feet is being erected on the Mariner tract to store farm machinery.

Work has been resumed on the new Happy Valley highway. The road is being scraped and culverts installed where found necessary. Happy Valley residents are anxious to see the surface gravel put on at once, as labor will be scarce later on. It is to be hoped that the county court will also have the old weather-beaten bridges at Happy Valley repaired inside and out, and a few junk nuts installed. It would add very much to the appearance of the highway.

The Harless Bros. are overhauling their grading machinery and gravel trucks at their ranch, preparatory to starting road work in Eastern Oregon.

The prospectors are good for a bumper-crop of prunes this year. The new orchards of Mr. A. E. Hoffmann and Jim De Ross are looking

Have and the new orchards of Pickens Bros. are making splendid growth.

The indications point to a large acreage of hayseed this year. In Happy Valley, Lyle Masters is producing around ten acres, Dickson Bros. thirty acres, and Harless Bros. will plant about 20 acres. They have found ten acres of broom-corn ground at the Harless ranch. In the Wabuska district Clay Smith will plant about 20 acres, Fred Winston will put in thirty acres. Harry Winston is preparing ground for one hundred and fifty acres on the Lander tract. Got at Dilford almost every melon patch is going to dip into the ground this year, and with a favorable season, it is predicted that Douglas county will produce over five hundred carloads of melon.

The Merry-go-round club met at the home of Mrs. George Johnson last Wednesday. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. George Bradford April 25th at 2 o'clock p. m.

The rapidly receding Yamana river at this time of the year recalls the memory of the early days when Happy Valley pioneers made a practice of fording the river. In the summer time when the water was high, Nels McColloch paddled the first man to blaze the trail across the river. His low water was a large log, but many a time McColloch would be obliged to stand on the seat of his back, balancing a crate of eggs in one hand and the base of his sturdy team in the other due to a slight change in the channel of the river. These days have gone forever.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Oaks will move to Portland Saturday where they will visit friends and attend to business matters.

George Hurt has purchased a new tractor and will proceed to keep things running on his Happy Valley ranch.

Mr. and Mrs. Van Horn and Joe Howard are being groomed by their friends on suitable candidates for the presidency of the Green Improvement club.

"A PURITAN WIFE"

By Jane Phelps

CHAPTER 4

Three more months rolled by and Ann was almost discouraged, yet not one word did she write that might disturb the dear ones at home. She often thought of Dick Helden—he had told her his name and address—here—and wondered if she would ever see him again. The strong vitality of the man, his boyish sympathy, his good looks, had taken a hold upon her imagination. She would shut her eyes and see him swinging down the street in his free, easy way, see the graceful posture, when he removed his broad-brimmed hat, see his lustrous blue eyes and the sun on his hair.

"I'll never see him again, what's the use of thinking of him?" she asked herself, but somehow went right on thinking.

Then one day he appeared at the schoolhouse just as the children were tramping out, calling "good-by teacher." Ann being a favorite with them all.

"They seem to like you," Helden said as he took her hand, nodding toward the fast disappearing group. "I guess it's because they know I like them." Ann replied smiling.

"Couldn't ask a fellow in to chat a bit?" the man suggested.

"Why, yes—that is, if you don't mind the janitress. She commences to clean as soon as the children are dismissed."

"Don't mind her a bit! What I do mind is not having a place where we can talk." Dick followed her into the schoolroom, and they sat side by side on the raised platform upon which stood her desk, while the janitress scurried under her breath because of the interruption.

For an hour they chatted, mostly of him, his ranch. Then he walked home with her, stopping to rest when he saw she was tired, accompanying his long strides to her steps, and apologizing when he forgot.

"I am going to be here several days—get business to attend to. Can I walk home with you tomorrow if I get to the schoolhouse in time?"

"I should be very glad to have you—if you will walk a little more slowly." Ann replied laughing.

"I'll try." He laughed too. "But I'm so used to traveling alone that I guess I'd distance without thinking. You see the ranch is pretty big and I tend to it myself. It takes some walking to cover the ground."

"She's a bright little thing, so cheerful and gay when she's sick," he muttered as he left her. "Nothing plummy about her—she's pretty too, and so little." He had the big man's admiration, his feeling of protection for a tiny woman.

Every day Helden called at the schoolhouse for Ann and several times he took her to ride in a hired motor to the early evening, careful not to keep her out late because of the darkness.

The time to return to his ranch was drawing near. When she thought of it Ann wondered how she was to see an, without him. She had given her feeling for him no amount of love she was happy with him, but when she did see him she would be disappointed.

"I must go back to the ranch to-morrow," he said as they sat on the porch of the boarding house. Ann carefully wrapped in a suit (shawl). "Will you write me, Ann? I love you, little girl. Will you marry me? A taxman without anything in the world but his ranch and his two hands to work? Do you care for me, dear?"

"Yes—I think—I like you!" "You will marry me?" his voice joyful.

"Yes, when this term is finished." Helden took Ann into his strong arms, and between emendations such as lovers make he assured her she would soon be well and strong, that he would take such good care of her, that she was sure to love the ranch and so on.

"The house doesn't amount to much, but if we have one or two good years we can fix it up or build a new one." Dick said her after they had settled down to talk of other things than the wonderful love that had come to them.

He left the next day and Ann, happy as she never had been in all her peaceful life, wrote home of the great love that had come to her, told them she had given her promise, and described her lover with her partial eyes so that John Peabody said:

"He must be a good man, Sarah. Ach would not write like that if he wasn't."

"But it means, John—she will live out there!"

"I know—but the doctor was saying the other day she must try to get where it was warmer so she could, she wrote him—she promised too, you know—that she was still coaching. God will take care of her, mother, and of us. He has sent this young man to help us keep her parents."

So they comforted each other, and wrote Ann they were happy in her happiness, offering her a small check to help buy what she would need as a bride. Her salary was pitifully small and she had very little left after paying her board. That, they too had little, was not mentioned.

Tomorrow—leave in a ranch-house.
