Portland Man Gained 21 Lbs. Taking Tanlac

G. W. Lewis Declares Famous Medicine Ended Long-Standing Stomach Trouble, Restoring Health, Strength and Vigor.

When a medicine produces results, its praise is sure to be heard. That is why G. W. Lewis, well-known night watchman for the Willamette Iron & Steel Works, living at 257 N. 22nd St., Portland, as well as hundreds of other Oregon people, so readily speak up for Tanlac.

"Tanlac did such fine work in my case," said Mr. Lewis, "that I can recommend it in the highest terms. For several years, I had been suffering from stomach trouble and a rundown condition. My appetite called for very little, and after meals I would bloat up with gas and be in terrible pain and misery. I lost weight so fast that I fell off from one hundred and eighty to one hundred and fifty nine pounds before I knew it. I began to have rheumatism in my legs so bad that it was an effort for me to make my rounds, and after being on the job all night I came home so worn out it took half the day for me to get to sleep.

"I wasn't able to get any relief until I finally hit upon Tanlac, but this treatment put me in fine shape, and I have been taking it off and on for the past two years just to keep in perfect trim. I certainly do full justice to my meals now, and my weight has gone up to one hundred and eighty pounds. I sleep like a log when I get in from work, and although I'm rounding out my sixty-ninth year, I don't feel a day over thirty five. Other people, of course, can have the medicine they want, but I'll take Tanlac for mine every time."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Take no substitute. Over 35 million bottles sold.

AVIATORS REPORT NO LOSS OF LIFE

(By Associated Press)
RANTOUL, Ill., April 18.—Not a fatality has been checked against the air service during the three months that have elapsed since Major General Mason M. Patrick, chief of the United States Air Service issued orders to the commanding officers of Chanute, Bolling, Langley, Mitchell, McCook and Selfridge Fields to inaugurate regular scheduled flights over a model airway over the eastern and middle western states, according to records here.

The model air course takes in New York, Hampton, Va., Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit, Kokomo, Ind., and Rantoul. Each field dispatches a plane bi-weekly.

The records show that the first flights were not all completed on schedule time, but each trip has shown an improvement. A trip recently completed was from Chanute Field to Dayton, O., to Columbus, O., back to Dayton, to Monroeville, W. Va., to Washington to Cumberland, Md., to New York, back to Washington, to Monroeville, to Cleveland, to Detroit, to Toledo, back to Detroit, to Kokomo, Ind., and return to Chanute Field. The distance covered was more than 200 miles and the total actual flying time was 22 hours and ten minutes.

While no aviator was killed, yet the flights were far from devoid of excitement and hairbreadth escapes.

Major F. L. Martin in a recent trip left Chanute on a route which covered 1800 miles. He was furnished with strip maps covering the entire route, but only for territory a few miles on each side of the route. The only landing place between Zanesville, Ohio and Washington is Moundsville, the remaining landscape being almost continuously mountainous. Being behind schedule, Major Martin tried a more direct route than that outlined and almost immediately ran into a strong headwind and dense clouds. He was blown off his course while flying over the mountains. After some time of aimless flying, trying to obtain his bearings he suddenly realized his gas was getting low, his oil was almost gone, and that he had no place to land. He was rather high at the time and dropped down to try for a landing. Just before his gas gave out he saw a town and recognized it as Moundsville, his original objective. On landing safely he found he had only three gallons of gasoline left, and no oil.

Lieutenant Floyd A. Landell started the only flight in the three months that was not carried to a successful conclusion, but fellow aviators look upon him as having a charmed life. His first mishap on his route from Chanute to New York was when a spark plug went wrong and he was forced down near Wheeling, W. Va. He repaired the damage and took off again only to find dense clouds confronting him. When he had climbed above them he learned he was out of oil. He again landed safely, replenished his oil tank and was off again for Washington. He arrived there a day late, but went on immediately to New York intending to make up time by returning to Washington the same afternoon. Lieut. Landell started from New York just before twilight and a strong wind almost immediately blew him off his course. He finally found himself on the edge of Chesapeake Bay fighting an outgoing wind. He was forced to land, but it was too dark to see the ground. He finally decided to go blind and landed in a field, but Lady Luck had her hand turned the other way and he hit the only tree in the field. His plane crashed and was demolished, but the aviator escaped with a slight cut over the eye.
